The first volume of the edition of Manilius now completed was published in 1903, the second in 1912, the third in 1916, and the fourth in 1920. All were produced at my own expense and offered to the public at much less than cost price ; but this unscrupulous artifice did not overcome the natural disrelish of mankind for the combination of a tedious author with an odious editor. Of each volume there were printed 400 copies : only the first is yet sold out, and that took 23 years ; and the reason why it took no longer is that it found purchasers among the unlearned, who had heard that it contained a scurrilous preface and hoped to extract from it a low enjoyment.

A preface to this Fifth book shall follow, but first I will take a retrospective survey of the period ; and I begin with the question of the MSS.

Of β , the second of the two families, now shrunk to a single representative M, I need here say little beyond what will be found on pp. 101 sq. and 104. I have satisfied myself by comparison that U and R throughout, and V so far as it concerns us, are scions of M, and I have no doubt that H, though I have not read it through, is another. They all proffer its Italian corrections as well as its original text. But, although M is thus left alone in the witness-box, the sign β may usefully be kept to denote its lost exemplar, the ms discovered by Poggio ; for a vast number of the corruptions in M have sprouted from the pen of its ignorant and unpractised scribe and are no part of an ancient tradition.

Of the other family, α , there are three representatives, L and G and Gronouius' imperfect collation of the lost cod. Venetus. The cod. Cusanus is none. This ms was brought into use by Jacob in 1846 and retained in the apparatus criticus by Bechert in 1900 : in 1903 I set it aside, but Breiter, unwilling to learn from one so much younger than himself, brought it back in 1907. It is now gone for ever. As I explain on pp. 102 sq., it is a copy of L, and is itself the parent of Voss. 1 and of the first portion of V, which therefore follow it into exile.

Of the three surviving witnesses L is much the most faithful, and there is no reason to doubt that it was copied straight from α , whereas G and Ven. must be copies of copies. The superiority of L as a representative of a is acknowledged by G and Ven. themselves, for they much oftener side with L against one another than they side with one another against L; but it is sometimes further confirmed by the adherence, entire or partial, of M, representing a's brother B. For example: II 958 *consummat LM, consumat G Ven., III 635 status M, satus L, situs G, satis Ven., IV 23 an] ad LM, aut G, id Ven., 453 tu L, tri M, tum G, tunc Ven., 489 septima fertur M, sexta fertur L, sexta feretur G, sexta refertur Ven., 524 dote M, docte L, nocte G Ven., 525 cum profert unda M, profert cum unda L, profert cum uincla G, profert quando unda Ven., 580 babiloniacas sum mersa profugit M, babilonia casum mersa profugit L, babilonias casus profugit G, babilonia casum mutauit Ven., 677 orbes LM, urbes G, orbem Ven., v 57 decuma lateris] deus malateris L, deus mala terris M, summa lateris G, om. Ven., 137 ingenita est] ingeniest M, ingeniem L, ingenium G, ingentem Ven., 487 rorantis] rotantis LM, portantis G, potantis Ven. Beside these places, where the reading of a, preserved by L, was true or close to the truth, there are others where it was false or inferior, but where it is equally possible to see, or reasonable to suspect, that L has preserved it, and that any true or superior reading presented by G or Ven. is derived either from conjecture or from some source other than a. Such are II 259 *pede G, per de LM, pes Ven., 449 per Ven., fer L, fers M, fert G, IV 223 peragrant Ven., perarant LM, pererrant G, v 41 rector G, pector M, pectus L, uectus Ven., 392 senibus GM, sensibus L, sensus Ven., 403 merces est parua GM, parua merces est L, parua mercede Ven., 407 mutat GM, mittat L, mittit Ven., 525 imperat GM, imperit L, imperio Ven.

Before I proceed to G I must interpose a narrative.

In 1903 G was the sovereign ms. Bentley had called it so; and although he did not treat it as such, but made more use of V in restoring the text, his words outweighed his actions, as words generally do, and as they did again when he preached one thing and practised another in his dealings with the Blandinianus uetustissimus of Horace. Jacob in 1846 pronounced it interpolated, degraded it to the third place, and exalted V to the first; but he gave no reasoned and ordered proof of his assertion, and succeeding critics * one after another, from Breiter in 1854 to Bechert in 1900, condemned his judgment and upheld the primacy of G. Bechert's devotion exceeded all precedent, and M stood low in his esteem: 'codicibus ita usus sum, ut a G libro in textu constituendo proficiscendum ratus huius codicis memoriam in textum reciperem, reliquorum codicum testimonia non nisi speciosiora proferens. ubi autem G lectio deprauata esse mihi uidebatur, L & C libros arcessui ; sed ne his quidem sufficientibus adii VM libros in extremo potissimum carmine haud spernendos'. But even this idolatry was not abject enough for Vollmer, who in Berl. Phil. Woch. 1900 pp. 1292-4 might be seen defending interpolations and corruptions abandoned by Bechert himself.

* Ellis in 1891, though placing G first, allowed much weight to V; and in 1893 both he and Breiter recognised, though not sufficiently, the value of M.

In 1903, on pp. xxvi-xxviii of my first volume, I demonstrated the truth which Jacob had in vain asserted, and showed that G is a much interpolated ms, inferior in sincerity to L and still more to M. This is now denied by nobody and only ignored by the ignorant. The revolution was immediate and complete, and the revulsion excessive. In 1904, Berl. Phil. Woch. p. 104, Vollmer rose from his knees, renounced his faith, and stamped upon the altar ; nam cupide conculcatur nimis ante metutum. The slaves of words, for whom interpolation is a name of superstitious terror, set to and disparaged G as hard as they could ; and incompetent critics, conscious of their own inability to extract truth from interpolated mss, began to insist that it should be used as little as possible. M and L were now to be the sole authorities ; where they agreed, that gave the tradition ; where G in contradiction gave the truth, that was conjectural emendation ; and 'hätte Housman eine Ahnung von Überlieferungsgeschichte' he would have come to the same conclusion.

If so, my sad deficiency is a blessing in disguise. Unable to soar in the void, I creep upon the earth ; and there I make the acquaintance of stony facts. They teach me, and in this preface I will teach the teachable, that G is not merely an independent witness to the text of a but much more than that. For the moment however I am considering it in this aspect only, as one of a's three representatives.

The revolution of which I was the guilty author attained its culmination in a boastful article* 'de librorum Manilianorum

* Mr Thielscher made the impression which he desired and had no cause to be dissatisfied with his reception. 'Es war das Verdienst Paul Thielschers, in das Chaos der M.-Überlieferung Licht gebracht zu haben' said Mr M. Schuster in Burs. Jahresb. vol. 212 p. 89. Mr Schuster could not be expected to know the facts, but an editor of Manilius showed equal ignorance : van Wageningen p. iii 'ex iis quae Paulus Thielscher de librorum Manilianorum recensione disputauit, satis apparent omnes illos libros . . . ex uno eodemque exemplari fluxisse' etc. The obvious truth that the mss of Manilius, as of most authors, are descended from an archetype was demonstrated by Jacob in 1846 and at greater length by Bechert in 1878. That they form two families was demonstrated by Bechert at the same time. The chief novelties in Mr Thielscher's article were the errors which I am about to refute.

recensione' published by Mr Paul Thielscher in Philol. LXVI (1907) pp. 106–125, where he undertook to support by theory what Vollmer had recommended in practice. He contended that G was a copy of L as corrected by L². On p. xxv of my first volume I had tacitly and incidentally refuted this theory before ever it was propounded; but it was nevertheless embraced in 1915 by van Wageningen in the preface to his recension: in the preface only, for in his recension itself he treated G throughout as an independent authority and sometimes allowed it too much weight. To prove his contention Mr Thielscher on pp. 123–5 selected 75 examples. They are simply examples compatible—though one at least, iv 414, is not compatible—with his hypothesis; and he might easily have cited 750 or 7500. Every one of them is equally consonant with the true hypothesis, that G and L are derived from a common source; and most of them, being cases of simple agreement, are equally consonant with a third hypothesis, that L is derived from G. If L, as Mr Thielscher supposes, is older than G, and this hypothesis therefore impossible, that only makes the futility of such argument more obvious. That L's corrections are not all of them older than G he himself admits *; some of them are in fact much later; and one of these he has had the ill luck to include among his proofs of G's derivation from L. It is at i 684, where L has positos with a added above, and G positas: the superscript a is in the hand of which I speak on p. 100, a hand of the 13th century or later; so that if, as Mr Thielscher will have it, one is derived from the other, G must be the source. This mischance may perhaps bring home to him the truth, which should have been self-evident, that simple agreement between two MSS is no proof that either is derived from the other; and most of his examples are of this kind,—places where G and L² have the same reading, as III 2 saltos LM, saltus GL², or where G and L have the same reading, as i 520 puncto L²M, ponto GL. Another such, iv 422 ponti L²M, christi GL, is paraded by van Wageningen † p. vi, who calls it, heaven knows why, 'ex omnibus grauissimum'; and Mr M. Schuster in Bursian's Jahresbericht vol. 212 p. 90 unreservedly agrees with him and says 'dieses eine Beispiel mag genügen'. The argument is that because G was not copied from L after christi had been corrected to ponti, therefore it was copied before : that is how we prove that G was copied from L.

* About albanas iv 659 he is of two minds: on p. 110 it 'transiit in Gemblacensem', on p. 116 it is 'Gemblacensi posterior'.

† Van Wageningen on the same page makes the false and calumnious statement, repeated by Mr Bickel Rhein. Mus. 1926 p. 333, that Traube, like Mr Thielscher, held G to be an apograph of L. Traube was guilty of no such impertinence: he knew that this was a question not for him but for scholars conversant with Manilius. What he said, Philol. 1907 p. 122, was what a palaeographer could say without immodesty: that L seemed to him, so far as he could judge from photographs, rather older than G.

The case would be altered if there were truth in the assumption made by Mr Thielsscher pp. 112-5 and swallowed whole by van Wageningen, that the ms discovered by Poggio was the Manilian archetype and that L as well as M was directly copied from it. But there is none: it is a second hypothesis in aid of the first, and a false one. The number and magnitude of the differences between L and M make it incredible that they are sons of one sire, and it is easy to show that they are not. Some of their divergencies are manifestly progressive, and have a history behind them. In v 389 Manilius wrote anguitenens and the archetype had the corruption arquitenens; but neither the arcetenens of L nor the et qui tenens of M came immediately from this: arcetenens came through arcitenens and et qui tenens probably through at qui tenens. In I 163 the original saccata passed straight into the siccata of L, but into the fetata of M it passed through such stages as saecata and faetata. At v 443, where M has the true reading molliter and L the corruption tollitur, we could guess, even if Ven. did not preserve mollitur, that this had been an earlier step on the downward way. The verse III 7 is given by M in its true place and with its true reading, 'non coniuratos reges Troiaque cadente'; in L it stands between 37 and 38 with curatos and cadentes. The writer of L did not make all these changes: the transposition was an accident, the alteration cadentes was subsequent, consequential, and deliberate, the misinterpretation of ciuratos was heedless and stupid. How, at I 517, could the one scribe copy as xutas uariam what the other copied as iunariam exutam? Who will believe that when the scribe of L twice, in II 172 and 190, had mistaken the abbreviation of hominis for oris, the scribe of M, 'ignorantissimus omnium uiuentium', twice expanded it correctly? or that he in the 15th century could decipher minor ibi touit at IV 414, where L in the 11th could get no nearer than minoribus? or that the verses IV 10-313, which L in the 11th century found standing between III 399 and 400, had returned to their proper place by the 15th century, or were restored to it by the illiterate copyist of M?

That G was not copied from L I shall prove by evidence of very different validity from Mr Thielscher's; but before producing the whole of it I may as well decide the question at one stroke. II 153:

L cernis ut aduersus redeundo surgat in arcum
G cernis ut aduersus surgat in arcum.

G has a blank space just sufficient to hold redeundo. In L redeundo is as clearly written as any word in the verse ; it is as plain as print. It is also perfectly intelligible ; though that has no bearing on the question, since G is not one of those mss, like Ven. and Vrb. 667, which omit words because of their unintelligibility. The case is clear : G was copied from a MS in which redeundo was illegible. And there's an end on't : G is not a copy of L.

L and G are not father and son but uncle and nephew. G was copied from a ms, I will call it γ, much resembling L, which had been corrected by a hand somewhat resembling L². But it had many corrections which L² has not, it lacked many which L² exhibits, and its corrections were often different from those of L²; and the primitive substance of its text was derived not from L but from a. For example in iv 318 ‘extremam Erigonae tribuit’ L has erigonem, G trigone. Neither is derived from the other; they are equidistant from the truth, and point to erigone or erigoneē in the common source.

To determine in such cases the reading of a we can sometimes employ the joint witness of M to the reading of the archetype. iv 414:

M quaque minor ibi touit namque omnia mixtis
G quaque minor namque omnia mixtis
L quaque minoribus namque omnia mixtis.

a had ibi touis or something of the same length; γ could not read it and left the proper space; L read it wrong and reproduced it inexactly.*

III 432 munere] munero M, numero L, munera G. a, like M, had munero, which in L and G is corrupted separately and differently.

iv 519 feminei incedunt nec] feminea iuceat nec M, feminea iace (space of 3 letters) nec G, feminea iacet nec L. a had iaceat (as L² corrects) or iaceant.

iv 894 mundus in ipsis L, mundus ipsis GM and almost certainly a; for it is evidently much more probable that the unmetrical reading was in the archetype and that L made the obvious correction, than that in was twice omitted. ‘Liesse sich etwa zeigen, dass M und G in Korruptelen übereinstimmen, die in L von erster Hand durch Konjektur behoben sind, so wäre ich ins Unrecht gesetzt’ said Mr Thielscher Philol. LXXXII p. 173.

The many cases—far more than are registered in my apparatus criticus or need to be registered in any—where GM agree in truth and L is in error are not certain proof of G's separate derivation from α ; for it will appear hereafter that G has derived true readings from β or some source other than α , and some of its true readings are such as may be due to conjecture. But a valid argument may be drawn from sundry agreements in orthography.

G's orthography in general, compared with L's, is modernised and vulgarised. It tends to assimilate the preposition in compounds where L does not, and to give -es in accusatives plural where L gives -is. It is natural to infer that in such places the spelling of a was that of L and not of G ; and the inference becomes more than natural, it becomes virtually certain, in the many places where M agrees with L. In the few places where G agrees with M in the older form and L presents the later, it is a still more certain inference that G is preserving, and L has altered, the spelling of a; for L sometimes modernises, giving affectus and similes where M has adfectus and similis, but G never gives the old forms where M has the new. Therefore at v 38 in ignis G, unguis M, in ignes L, the spelling of G comes from a; and so too at III 269, 663, v 98 inp- GM, imp- L.

The adverb idcirco appears in 12 places. In all of them it is so spelt by M, and in 11 by L; and when G in 8 of the 11 offers iccirco we set its testimony aside. When therefore at III 525 L gives iccirco and G together with M idcirco, against its usual inclination, we infer that G and not L is here true to a.

The nominative or vocative of Iouis occurs 10 times. G and L agree once in Iuppiter and once in Iupiter. In 4 verses L has pp and G p; and M (except once where it is quite corrupt) agrees with L. In 4 other verses L has p and G pp, and in all of them M agrees with G, though in one it has ippiter. It is to be concluded that in all 8 verses a had the true spelling and that G's pp is thence derived.

Even outside the department of orthography there is at least one place where the agreement of M with G in a true reading conducts us to the text of a. I 520 :

nec motus puncto curuat cursusque fatigat.

puncto curuat M, ponto curuat G, ponto currat L, ponti curat Ven. G's curuat is no conjecture, for it needs puncto to make it intelligible : it is the reading of a, diversely corrupted in L and Ven. ; for I already assume, what I shall presently prove, that Ven. also is independently derived from a.

Mr Thielsscher himself allows, or rather did allow in 1907 (Philol. LXVI pp. 114 sq.), that some of G's capitula must have come not from L but from the archetype. Most of L's capitula are of later date than G, and some of G's differ from L's and agree with M's. The two most noteworthy examples are II 297 de mensura eorum signiliter atque partiliter GM, de mensura trigonorum et quadratorum in partes L (not only at the verse but in the list prefixed to book II), and IV 866 fatorum rationem perspici posse GM, quomodo possimus fatorum rationem perspicere L. In 1926 (LXXXII pp. 174 sq.) he preferred to hope that these capitula may have been on the first leaf of L, now lost, and that G went there to find them.*

* Bechert de Man. em. rat. p. 10 n. 9 had more reasonably suggested that this leaf contained a list of the capitula of book I like that prefixed to book II.

Having established that G is no copy of L but a separate scion of a, I will now produce a few examples of what may seem at first sight to be contrary evidence; and they shall be more plausible than any of Mr Thielscher's.

Mr Thielscher's best was v 101 notanda] conanda M, cōnānda L, cananda G, where it is possible and even probable that G has negligently copied a ms which gave just what L gives; but there is no reason why that ms should not have been γ. The following case is similar but more striking, v 326 oeagrius M, oeagrius L, oe graius G: the correction in L might well be thus misinterpreted by a scribe who knew the word Graius and did not know Oeagrius. But on the other hand oegrinus may have been the reading of γ and even of a as it was of L, and γ² may have corrected it as L² did; or again a may have had oeagrius, and γ or G may have transposed one letter in the fashion which I illustrated so copiously on pp. liv sq. of my first volume. v 536 alterum M, altū L, altū ni G: this is evidently a misunderstanding of the abbreviation found in L; but that abbreviation may have been also in a and even in the archetype.

M flexos per lubrica terga
L² flexos in lubrica terga
flexos in
G lubrica flexos in terga.

Certainly if G had been copied from L it would be expected to give just this reading (though the Cusanus, indisputably copied from L, gives flexos lubrica in terga); but lubrica flexos in terga may have been the reading of a, better copied in G than in L; and that the reading of a was indeed unmetrical or somehow faulty may be surmised from the fact that Ven. omits the words. iv 796 aestibus M, astibus L, ictibus L², letibus G is peculiar in that the Cusanus also gives letibus. But its scribe was much to blame, for in the ictibus of L² the c at any rate is so good and clear that it might be thought unmistakable, and it is hardly possible that another scribe miscopied it in the same way.

As a warning against hasty inferences from such examples I add a case which likewise at first sight may seem to indicate that G was copied from L but which on examination is found to be part of the evidence that it was not. iv 164 reflecte L, reflectit L², reflectet (reflecti;) G: G's reading is a misapprehension of reflecte^{it}; that is how the correction was made in its exemplar. But in L it is not so made: the e is altered into i and t is added, and the Cusanus consequently has reflectit.

But, apart from this detailed refutation by an adversary, Mr Thielscher's theory that G is an apograph of L will have to fight for its life against two other of his theories: the equally false theory that Ven. was an apograph of L, and the true theory that the Cusanus is. If these three mss had been copied from any one ms, the width of their divergency, which no apparatus criticus reveals, would be inexplicable. Its explanation is that they are copies of three several copies of a; that they have not a common parent but only a common grandparent. And the reason why the Cusanus is so much closer to L than the others are is that it was really copied from L and they were not.

And now for the third and least faithful representative of a, the cod. Venetus, of which I give an account on pp. 103 sq. That in spite of its corruption and interpolation it is independently though not immediately derived from a can most clearly be shown by v 443 'molliter ut liquidis per humum ponuntur in undis': molliter ut MG, tollitur ut L, mollitur Ven. The reading of a must have been mollitur ut, rightly corrected by G, whether from conjecture or another source, wrongly and diversely altered by L and Ven. Again at II 368 'alterius ductus locus est per transita signa', where LG have alternis and Ven. ulterius, it appears that a, like M, had alterius.* Against Mr Thielscher's particular theory (Philol. LXVI p. 119), which he supports with no proof or argument, that Ven. was an apograph of L, there can be adduced also this example: III 487 multiplicans deciens] multiplicans decens M, multiplicatis decens L, multiplicata (space) dece (space) G Ven. The reading of L is clearly legible, and, although it is unmetrical, G does not thus omit letters for that reason, and Ven. omits wholesale and not piecemeal. The letters were obscure in a: the parents (γ and δ) of G and Ven. could not make them out at all; L deciphered them imperfectly. In cases such as II 665 nec iungitur G Ven., ne ciugitur M, nec pingitur L, it might possibly be contended that the true reading was restored by conjecture and was not in a. But, as I said above, if the Cusanus is an apograph of L (and it certainly is), then Ven. was not. The theory that Ven. was derived from G has not yet been propounded.

I have now shown that G is an independent authority, separately derived, like L, from a. But this, though true, is not a truth of the first importance; for the chief value of G lies in what it has derived from a source other than a. Whereas M and L are simple mss, G is a compound, and must be considered twice. I now leave behind the division between M (or β) and GL (or a) and come to another line of severance no less deep though formerly much less evident. It was in 1907 that Breiter's full though very inaccurate collation of L disclosed what neither Jacob nor even Bechert had enabled us to see: the division between LM and GL².

Some of the many readings common and peculiar to G and L² are certainly false and obviously conjectures. Others are no less certainly true; and certainly true are likewise a few readings peculiar to L² and a large number peculiar to G. Some of these are doubtless also conjectures, and others may be; and critics who dislike the labour, for which they are ill qualified, of patient and impartial examination—critics who thirty years ago would have accepted G's lections in the lump—now wish to believe that all these readings are conjectures. But a great many of them are incredibly good for the 11th century, and some of them are demonstrably drawn from an ancient source.

That source may sometimes be β. In iv 414, where L has minoribus, G minor with a blank space following, and Ven. nothing, L² writes ouit overhead. This, being meaningless, can be no conjecture, and it is in fact part of the reading of M, minor ibi touit. In ii 372, where GL have inclinat anne, L² underlines anne and writes uel ac above an: this makes no sense, but is nearly identical with the inclinata cue of M. In i 520, where GL have ponto, L² writes puncto, which is meaningless with the currat of L and is part of M's true reading puncto curuat. The same tale is told by iv 422 ponti L² et corr. ex pontu M, christi GL, ii 744 uires L²M, om. GL, iv 573 animus L²M, om. GL. It is therefore arbitrary to suppose that the following lections of L² are not also a part of the tradition: i 470 conditur L²M, caeditur GL, 616 uestigia L²M, fastigia GL, 820 torridus L²M, cordibus GL, 863 cum L²M, ne GL, ii 728 quia L²M, que L, quae G, 756 per L²M, et G, t L, iv 541 reuoget L²M, reticet L, retitet G, v 528 perfundit L²M, perfundo L, perfuncto G; I do not add ii 880 monte sub aethna L², montes subetna M, montes ceteris omissis GL, for there the true emendation was not hard to find.

At iv 245 the reading of L Ven., and therefore presumably of α, is flumina: GL² have munera. This is the reading of β or of the archetype, corrupted in M to numera. At iv 851

luna uotum tantum deficit in orbis L
luna nouum tantum defecit in orbem Ven., whatever the reading of α may have been, it certainly was not luna suo tunc tantum deficit orbe GL²;

but this is virtually the same as lunas uotum tantum deficit orbe M.

At v 41 L has pectus erit puppim and Ven. had uectus . . . puppi: by comparing the pector . . . puppi of M it can be inferred that α had pectus . . . puppi. GL² have rector . . . puppis. This, if a correction, is a correction not of α's reading but of β's; and it is more probably the reading of β itself or of the archetype, transmitted without mistake.

In some cases the source seems to lie even beyond the common parent of α and β . In vol. I p. xxv I gave a small selection from the many readings offered by G alone which are accepted, and must be, by all editors; and together with them I cited three significant corruptions.

II 494-6 :

Cancer et aduerso Capricornus conditus astro
in semet uertunt oculos, in mutua tendunt auribus.

uertitur oculis in muta M, uertitur oculis immutaque L; whence it appears that not only β but the archetype had the same as M, and that L or rather α made a faint attempt to better the metre. The 11th century, continuing the effort, made the transposition uertitur in semet L². G has uertunt oculusque (-us corr. in -os) in mutua. This is not a conjecture, for the scribe himself could not interpret it: he has underlined uertunt and written the sign of query in the margin. It is a slight corruption of the true and original reading, otherwise and worse corrupted in the source of α and β .

IV 282 :

iamque huc atque illuc agilem conuertere clavum.

illuc aligem G, huc caliginem L, huc caligine M. α and the archetype had the same as L, β or M subtracted a letter. The reading of G is an earlier stage of the corruption.

V 545 sq. :

hic hymenaeus erat, solataque publica damna priuatis lacrimans ornatur uictima poenae.

solaque G, solaque in LM. The unmetrical reading of G was the first error, and the reading of LM is an attempt to correct it.

It is therefore clear that G preserves truth not preserved elsewhere; and when, for instance, G alone offers the true reading Iouis et iuuisse at II 15 or peploque fluenti for populoque fluentis at V 392, those are much rather portions of this truth than emendations anticipating in the 11th century the perspicacity and deftness of the 15th; or again when GL² offer exterius mirantur for exterminantur at II 168 or uictricem Ebusum for uictrice mebus usum at IV 640 (where M² even in the 15th century could do no better than melius) or terga for aer at V 104.

If any future editor should seriously attempt what van Wageningen merely professed to do, and try to carry out in his recension the precepts of Vollmer and Mr Thielscher, he would find a formidable task confronting him. For his benefit and intimidation let me point out one small part of it. The following words, II 750 cuncta, III 32 casus, 274 ora, IV 680 hanc, V 157 uero, 198 sese, and many lesser ones, now printed in all editions, are absent from LM and repose on the sole authority of GL².

What may be the origin of genuine readings which were neither in α nor in β , and how they found their way into G or GL², I do not know, and therefore, having no inkling of Ueberlieferungsgeschichte, I will not pretend to know. If I formulate an hypothesis which would explain the facts, I beg that it may not be called my hypothesis. These readings, then, may have been in the margin of the archetype; they may thence have been copied into the margin of α and not of β , and thence into the text of γ and not of L. Catullus affords a parallel. The variants in the margin of his archetype were ignored by O but survive in the margins of G and R, whence some of them, even though obviously corrupt, have found their way into the text of later MSS. At 64 23 O has simply mater, G and R have mater with the variant matre, which is nearer to the true reading matrum preserved in the Veronese scholia of Virgil; and this matre, though meaningless, appears in the text of Laur. XXXIII 12. At 1 8 O has libelli, G libelli al. mei, Laur. mei, unmetrical though it is. At 64 324 O has only tutum opus, G and R have also the marginal variant tu tamen opis, which a few MSS therefore exhibit in their text. And in Manilius three or four of G's true and unique readings are offered by itself as variants: I 26 munera uel e, II 584 leuis uel lis, V 372 nitidos clamare uel nidis damnare, 408 insitor uel institor. This hypothesis however will hardly account for what we find at V 545, where the virtue of G resides in the mere absence of an interpolated word; and there it is conceivable that solaque without in was the reading of the archetype, preserved in α and transmitted to G, and that β and L hit independently on the same false conjecture.

There are about 20 MSS of the 15th century beside M. M's only progeny are URH and the latter and larger part of V. All the rest, so far as known, are descendants of α and apparently of the Cusanus.* This strain is pure, or virtually so, in the first part of V, in Voss. 1, and in the Venetian cod. Marc. XII 69 whence some lections are

* There are none of G, and the Venetus seems to have perished without issue; for its agreement here and there with later MSS, I 90 alias Flor. Bodl., II 565 agitat Par., III 4 indictos Par. Bodl. Caesen., 607 per Flor., 641 riget Flor., V 223 concita Flor., may easily be coincidence in conjecture. extracted by Mr Thielscher Rhein. Mus. 1907 pp. 50 sq.; to which may be added a lost ms called δ by Bentley in his marginalia and known to him from a collation in a Bodleian copy (identified by Mr Garrod as auct. O. 5. 17) of the ed. Bononiensis.* The remainder (again so far as known) are also of this strain in the staple of their text, but more or less improved by an admixture of the tradition of M. Among these the Florentine Laur. xxx 15 and the Oxonian Bodl. auct. F. 4. 34 are rich repertories of the emendations made by Italian scholars.†

Those emendations, as usual, are very numerous, and often brilliant though of course often obvious; and the editors before Scaliger, excepting Regiomontanus,‡ made no large addition to them: Scaliger himself and Bentley are the great augmenters of the sum.§ I have made a fairly diligent count of the corrections adopted in my text or approved in my commentary, arranging them in chronological order because emendation grows ever more difficult and success therefore more meritorious; and here it is. Cusanus 16, Itali 330, Regiomontanus 53, ed. Bononiensis 2, Bonincontrius 19, Dulcinius 11, ed. quaternaria (see p. 105) 4, ed. Aldina 3,

* Bentley once by a slip of the pen calls it ‘ δ Pithoei’, and hence springs the confusion on p. xiv of his nephew’s preface which is noted by Mr Garrod p. xlivi.

† I grudge space to matter so immaterial, but Mr Thielscher’s list in Philol. 1907 pp. 126–9 can be supplemented and Mr Garrod’s classification on pp. lv–lvii corrected by two pieces of precise information.

The cod. Caesenas an. 1457 (bibl. Malatest. 11^a Fila, xxvo Plutoe, v^o in ordine), of which Ellis sent word to Mr Thielscher, has one of these blended texts and is akin to the Bodleianus and to the ms next to be mentioned. I spent a couple of hours looking it through and collated the first hundred lines or so.

The α of Bentley’s margin is described by him as ‘cod. P. Pithoci Luyerii ad oram ed. Scalig. 1600’, which book Mr Garrod p. xliv identifies as Linc. D. 5. 13 in the Bodleian library. The ms there collated is probably now extant as G. 38. 46 in the public library of Boston in Massachusetts (Philological Quarterly I p. 105). It was written at Ferrara in 1461 by Peregrinus Allius, once belonged to Pithoeus, and was sold among the Barrois mss of the Earl of Ashburnham in June 1901. It is akin, as I have said, to the Caesenas, and in both of them Manilius is followed by Q. Serenus.

‡ Regiomontanus has so many corrections which have not been found in any ms that they must apparently be his own. Corrections which he shares with a ms should be assigned rather to it than to him unless its date is ascertained as later; for if the scribes had borrowed anything from him they must have borrowed more.

§ It is to be remembered, not in derogation of their merits, that Scaliger, as the first editor to use G, and Bentley, as the first to use V, found virgin soil. Breiter and Ellis found virgin soil again when M was discovered, but bequeathed it not much impoverished to me.

The archetype need not have been older than the 10th century. Words were sometimes separated (iv 692 stupe facta LM), sometimes continuous (v 366 nitidis olore uolantis L, utribi solore uola talis M). Indications of its script, as usual, are uncertain. Such a confusion as v 544 teneros L, tenebos M might seem to signify that it was Irish or at any rate insular; but similarly such confusions as Lucr. i 830 homoeomerian Q, homofomerian O and v 1337 eorum O, forum Q were taken by Lachmann for evidence that the Lucretian archetype was in capitals, whereas there is much more reason to think that it was not. That the text of Manilius has passed through an insular stage is likely enough, and such errors as v 655 porulum for populum and 687 aepa for area may be traces of it, though pompa rependit for roma pependit in i 917 is probably a case of transposition.

Some scholars think that they know much more than this about the archetype, especially about its pagination, and fancy that light is thrown upon this subject by certain transpositions in the first book, detected and corrected by Scaliger and recognised by Jacob in progr. Lubec. 1832 pp. 18–21 as transpositions of entire leaves. My observation saved me from this mistake, and my kind heart made me wish to save others; so in my note at i 529 I issued the warning that the leaves transposed were not leaves of the

* Fayus' emendations, to which in 1903 I did less than justice, for they excel Huetius' both in number and in quality, present something of a puzzle. He lays explicit claim only to nine of them; one, iv 781, he ascribes wrongly to others; one, ii 268, he ignores in his paraphrase; and the rest he treats as if they were MS readings.

† My praise of Jacob's emendations, which annoyed Ellis, was thoroughly deserved, and I have a good reason of my own for respecting them. When I first sat down to read Manilius through, I provided myself with the Delphin edition, Thomas's collation of G, and Ellis's so-called collation of M; and thus equipped I found out for myself more than half of those emendations of Scaliger which Fayus did not record, about one third of Bentley's, and almost all of Breiter's and Ellis's and their fellows'; but of Jacob's hardly one or two.

archetype but of an ancestor of the archetype. For the text exhibited by the archetype was a sequel and consequence of antecedent transposition, and also of a second antecedent, the ensuing and intervening loss of some of the verses which had been transposed. But I might have spared my pains. Bechert (de Man. em. rat. pp. 22–4) had come too soon to profit by the admonition, and Messrs Thielscher (Philol. LXVI pp. 129–32) and Garrod (pp. xix–xxv), notwithstanding their chronological advantage, profited no more than Bechert.

Verses 355–398 stand after 399–442, and verses 530–565 (to which M adds 565A and a repetition of 567) stand after 566–611. The first transposition is simple. Jacob observed that 355–398 and 399–442 are sets of 44 verses, presumably therefore a couple of leaves with 22 verses to the page ; and this presumption is confirmed by the fact that the preceding verses 1–354 (38 and 39 being interpolations of the 15th century) are 352 in number, apparently therefore, as Bechert remarked, 8 leaves of 44 verses each.* Now in the archetype, though the verses were 352, the lines were 354 ; for the archetype, elicited from the agreement of GLM, had titles in its text, and two of these, de origine mundi and quare terra sit rotunda, stood before 118 and 194 respectively. 354 is not a multiple of 44, and therefore these 8 leaves do not appear to have been leaves of the archetype. If the archetype had leaves of 44 lines, the contents of its 9th and 10th leaves were not 355–442 but 353–440, and the sets of verses transposed would have been 353–396 and 397–440.

The verses 443–529, intervening between this transposition and the next, are 87 in number, only one short of 44×2 ; and the number 88 may be obtained by supposing that a verse was lost, as other verses certainly were, between the date of the transposition and the date of the archetype,—perhaps, as I suggested, after verse 463, where the present text is awkward. The alternative hypothesis, that the title de aeternitate mundi before 483, present in the archetype, already existed in this earlier ms, which had no titles at 118 and 194, is less probable.

That the second transposition, involving the verses 530–611, can have been a transposition of two leaves of 44 verses in the archetype is quite clearly impossible. In the archetype, inferred from comparison of GL with M, the verses between 529 and 612 were not 88 in number but 84 at the utmost. The addition of the three titles before 539 and 561 and 566 will raise the number of lines to 87, or even to 88 if the first occupied two lines as it does in M; but one of those titles was inserted in consequence of the transposition and therefore after it, and so were at least three—in my opinion five—of the verses themselves. The genuine verses, existing at the time of the transposition, are 81 or fewer, and the addition of two titles will make only 84 lines at most; so that if the leaves transposed were leaves of the archetype they cannot have had 44 lines apiece. The leaves actually transposed, leaves of the archetype's ancestor, probably had: at any rate there is nothing to forbid that supposition, and I will give a conjectural picture of their contents.

That the verses between 563 and 567, since lost and therefore absent from the archetype, were 9 in number is a conjecture based on the common assumption of a leaf of 44 lines; but that some verses have been lost at that point is certain.* They contained Eudoxus' division of the distance between the poles into 30 parts, without which the following verses 567–593 would have been unintelligible. Why they exist no more, which of many possible accidents swept them away, there is no means of determining.

The transposition of these two leaves brought 567 † into immediate contact with 612: there it stood in the archetype, and

* A verse has probably been lost also after 560, as Jacob saw; but that may have happened earlier.

† I formerly, on p. 53 of my first volume, expelled 567, together with the spurious 566, for an insufficient reason, declaring at the same time that it was quite a good verse in itself. Let me also here call attention to the correction, on pp. 116 sq. of this volume, of the words 'iterum scripti 566 567' in my note on 1 529.

there it still stands in M. A corrector of the archetype with some knowledge of astronomy perceived that it had nothing to do with 612 sqq. and the colure of the equinoxes, that it could only refer to the arctic circle, and that its right place therefore was before 568, where alter is the second parallel circle, the tropic of Cancer. He accordingly marked it for deletion here and added it in the margin at that place, prefixing a bad verse of his own, 566, to complete the sentence ; and in the margin at 612, to complete the sentence 612–7, he wrote three verses, 564 565 565A, descriptive of the colure of the equinoxes and equivalent in their contents to the genuine verses 609–611, which by reason of their transposition escaped his notice.* These corrections were received into α and β , but not all of them into both. In α the verse 567 was abolished where it stood, and 566 and 567 were inserted before 568, but only 564 and 565 were inserted before 612. In β the verses 566 and 567 were similarly inserted before 568, but 567 was not deleted in its original place ; all the three verses 564 565 565A were inserted, but above 567 and not below it, and so not immediately before 612.†

To the same corrector I attribute certain phenomena presented by the titles ‡ in this part of the poem. The title de magnitudine et latitudine (GL, latitudine et magnitudine M) mundi et signorum before 539 is one of the ordinary series and correctly states the

* The numeration of verses in this neighbourhood, which we inherit from Jacob, may mislead, nay it has misled, the unwary ; so let me say that 564 and 565 do not stand before 566 in the MSS but were put there by Jacob : in the MSS they stand before 612, though separated from it in M by two verses, 565A (to which I gave that number because it follows Jacob's 565 and belongs to it) and 567, which in M occurs here as well as before 568.

† Not even when I had thus explained on p. 53 of my first volume the origin of 564 565 565A and their cohesion with 612 did Mr Thielscher comprehend it. Hypnotised, I suppose, by Jacob's numeration, he imagined that 564, genuine in his opinion, cohered with 563 and referred (which it cannot) to the arctic circle, that 565 was interpolated to fill a gap at that point and also referred to the arctic circle (which again it cannot), and that 565A was added (with what conceivable motive or meaning ?) after the transcription of α (or as he says L) and so found its way only into β (or as he says M). I may remark here that one of the leaves of Mr Thielscher's archetype contains 45 verses instead of 44, so that precise calculation ceases ; the same leaf of Mr Garrod's has room for 46. But Mr Garrod's whole disputation on the form of the archetype, pp. xix–xxv, is futile ; not only nor chiefly because of its mistakes in fact and arithmetic, but because his pagination habitually ignores the space occupied by the titles which the archetype is known to have contained, and only takes account of them when it happens to suit his purpose.

‡ If the titles before 539 and 561 existed in the MS whose leaves were transposed, which we have seen to be unlikely, that will not disturb the reckoning ; it will only reduce the number of missing verses from 9 to 7 or perhaps 6.

contents of 539–560. But between 560 and 561 M has de circulis caelestibus: de coluris. The former title is right; it states the contents of 561–804. The latter, de coluris, is wrong; the right place for it would be before 603 sunt duo, and it states the contents of 603–630. But the verses between 563 and 567 had been lost, and the transposition of leaves had carried away 568–611, so that 612–630, describing the colures, followed on 563 (with only the intervention of 567, which this corrector was removing), and the colures were therefore the first circles occurring after 561. The corrector accordingly wrote de coluris before that verse, beside the older title de circulis caelestibus. In B both were reproduced; but a took de coluris to be a correction of de circulis caelestibus, and so L gives de coluris only. (In G there is no title and no space for it; de coluris is added by a later hand in the margin.)

Between 529 and 566 L and M have the title de parallelis circulis, and G has it in the margin, apparently from the first hand. It has no business to follow 529, but it is appropriate to 566–602, and was probably added by the corrector together with his own verse 566 when he inserted 567 at this place.

The transpositions in book I are thus seen to have been earlier than the archetype. Another, the great transposition of III 400–IV 9 and IV 10–313, is later, and found only in MSS of the family a. The verses IV 10–313 are 304 in number, that is 38×8 ; and III 400–IV 9, together with the 9 titles, occupying 10 lines, which existed in this portion of the archetype, are nearly the same, 302. It looks therefore as if a quaternio * of 38 lines to the page had here been folded inside out, so that its last half came first, as I suggested in my note at III 399. This suspicion I can now confirm. In L, our best representative of a, the number of lines in the preceding part of the poem, I 1–III 399, verses and titles and spaces for titles together, is 2364; and its text, as was pointed out by Bechert de Man. em. rat. p. 10 n. 9, begins on the 2nd leaf of its 1st quaternio, the 1st leaf, now lost, having contained no verses. If a resembled it in these features, and had 38 lines to the page, the number of lines preceding III 400 was about 2440 ($2364 + 76$); and 608×4 (4 quaternios) is 2432. It becomes pretty clear that III 400–IV 313 were the contents of the 5th quaternio of a.

But Bechert p. 23 and Mr Thielscher Philol. LXVI pp. 131 sq. refer this transposition, though only one family is affected by it, to their imaginary archetype. For Bechert the interchanged members (304 and 302 lines) are two sets of 7 leaves ($44 \times 7 = 308$) : how sets of 7 leaves could be interchanged he does not explain, nor what has become of the superabundant verses. For Mr Thielscher, whose archetype is wax in its creator's hands, these are two ternios of about 48 ($48 \times 6 = 288$) * or 50 ($50 \times 6 = 300$) lines to the leaf. How it happens that β was unaffected by the transposition Bechert did not enquire ; but this was a very serious question for Mr Thielscher, who is committed to the false assumption that L and M are direct copies of the archetype. That false it is I have already shown on p. ix ; the glimpse which we have just caught of α is another nail in its coffin ; and the shift to which it here reduces Mr Thielscher ought to make even him distrust it. If M and not L were the ms with the wrong order, he would have no trouble ; he could say that the transposition took place between the 11th and the 15th century. But now he is forced to suppose that the leaves of his endlessly subservient and obliging archetype, after having been astray in the 11th century, were consecutive in the 15th.

* Mr Garrod p. xix saw that the transposition must have been later than the archetype, and found the number 38; but beside overlooking the titles he went astray in his arithmetic and operated with ternios.

From the mss I now proceed to the efflorescence of editions which has enriched the opening of the 20th century.

In 1907, his 83rd year, Breiter published the first volume, text with apparatus criticus, of the edition which he had been meditating for a lifetime ; the second, a commentary, followed in 1908, a few months before his death. Though slender in bulk and unpretentious in character they were hailed by his countrymen as a ‘gigantisches Lebenswerk’ and a ‘monumentum aere perennius deutschen Gelehrtenfleisses’ ; ‘Durch ihren hohen wissenschaftlichen Wert tritt Br.’s Ausgabe den Arbeiten Scaligers, Bentleys und —eloquent conjunction—‘Pingrés würdig zur Seite’ ; ‘Die Wissenschaft ist um ein monumentales Hilfsmittel für das Verständnis dieses schweren Dichters bereichert, der Studierende hat einen zuverlässigen Führer gewonnen : immensus labor est et fertilis idem !’ This ought not to be forgotten, and the reader should bear it steadily in mind as he peruses what I am about to say.

Breiter’s papers in Fleckisen’s Neue Jahrbücher, vol. 139 (1889) and vol. 147 (1893), were the most estimable contribution made to the study of Manilius after Jacob’s edition. The corrections of Ellis were rather more numerous, and one or two of them were very pretty, but his readers were in perpetual contact with the intellect of an idiot child : in Breiter’s articles the good preponderated, and he thought and wrote like a sane man and a grown man. His edition therefore, when at last it came, was a severe disappointment ; and on a general view it detracts from his merit. It was not senile, but it showed that an edition was an undertaking beyond his powers.

* The explanation of this low figure is that he has overlooked the titles and so reckons iii 400–iv 9 as 292 lines.

His recension is to be commended in so far as it maintains a fairly just balance between the rival MSS and avoids the bias of Bechert on one side and of Jacob on the other ; but his use and choice of emendation was haphazard, and his own new conjectures, extorted by the task of editing, were without exception worthless. In his apparatus criticus he persisted in retaining the cod. Cusanus, because he was much too old to take example by me ; he wantonly deceived the less wary of his readers with an inaccurate collation of G, which others had collated accurately ; and his collation of L, which should have been a boon and a blessing, because much fuller and more minute than Bechert's, was an insidious peril and a pernicious nuisance. His eyesight was evidently feeble, and did not serve him well in collating MSS or correcting proofs ; but that is not enough to account for the bucketfuls of falsehood which he discharged on an ignorant and confiding public. In book III, which is much the shortest book, his apparatus, consisting of fewer than 350 lines, contains more than 110 definitely false statements : I do not reckon its frequent and deceitful omissions, nor the equally deceitful consequences of the editor's ignorance of his trade.* He says in vol. I pp. x sq. ' sedulo caui, ne, ubi textus coniecturis mutatus esset, quid codices exhiberent, ignoraretur ' ; but it is far from the truth : he has silently substituted pristis for cetus I 433, fugientis for fulgentis 583, atque for que 801, ubi for ubique 808, dimissus for dimissus 821, pectore for lumine 845, f. non umquam for numquam f. 876, tibi for sibi II 223, ferae for suae 533, quae for qua 849, furuum for fuluum 912, and so forth. The authorship of emendations accepted is never mentioned in the apparatus and not usually in the commentary either ; hundreds which belong to others are thus tacitly claimed for his own, and a good few even explicitly. The verse v 17 has totally disappeared.

* As when at III 52 he implies, without intending it, that half his MSS omit undam. For a tiny sample of this ubiquitous inexpertness take the apparatus of his first page, just over four lines in length : I should premise that it contains three misprints, which are corrected at the end of vol. II with a new misprint to keep the pot boiling. Verse 1 : text artes, note ' artes glcu' : those four are all his MSS, why then the note ? because, like many another, it is a note not on his own text but on Jacob's, which here has artis. Verse 5 : text nutantis, note ' nutantis lu₂, imitantis u₁' : what then have gc ? Verse 21 : text aestu, note ' estu lu' : who wants to know that ? and gc have the same. Verse 22 : text rerum, note ' circum u₂ circum u₁ (in marg. rerum) rerum ω' : wrong end foremost, with the lemma at the tail. Verse 23 : text inmenso, note ' inmenso l' : what then have the other MSS ? and why was there no note at 14, where again the text has inmenso and the MSS have just what they have here ? Verse 24 : text inmittit, note ' inmittit l' : again, what have the others ?

The commentary is plain and concise, but meagre, and a student without other resource would starve on it. It makes no pretence whatever to ‘wissenschaftlichen Wert’. Breiter’s chief purpose was to explain for novices the astrology of the poem, but his knowledge of the subject was neither original nor adequate. Verbal interpretation is often lacking, critical discussion is generally shunned, and Latinity gets little attention. Falsehoods, blunders of every sort and size, self-contradictions, misinterpretations, miscalculations, misquotations and misprints leave few pages undisfigured.

In 1911 an elaborate edition of the Second book was produced by Mr H. W. Garrod. I declined to review it on its publication, leaving it a fair field in which it received no competent criticism except from Mr J. G. Smyly in Hermathena 1912 pp. 137–68. Mr Garrod brought to his task activity and energy, a brisk intelligence, and a strong desire to shine. His book, unlike the work of a later editor, was the fruit of independent investigation, diversified reading, and genuine industry. The most valuable part of its contents was the new and enlarged knowledge of the cod. Venetus provided by his discovery of Gronouius’ collation in the margin of a book of Bentley’s. There is one passage, 681 sq., which Mr Garrod, though not the first to understand it, was the first to explain, because the interpreters had not understood it ; but I do not think that any other of his interpretations is both new and true. His conjectures were singularly cheap and shallow, and his impatience of more circumspect emendators, such as Bentley, broke out at 689 in insolence. The apparatus criticus is neither skilful nor careful, often defective and sometimes visibly so ; I have counted more than 60 positive misstatements, of which only a minority can be laid at Breiter’s door. The translation is dexterous and serviceable, but has an average of more than three false renderings to the page, not counting the suppression of inconvenient words and the insertion of convenient ones. Some of his interpretations were so little pondered that he changed them in the course of his work without perceiving it : there are more than a dozen places where translation and commentary contradict one another, and at 409 discrepancy is not confined to them. An astrological figure on p. 146, borrowed from others, is false in four particulars to the editor’s own text. The commentary, which is full and mainly original, contains much more truth than error, but it contains so much error that the only readers who can use it with safety are those whose knowledge extends beyond Mr Garrod's ; though even a student quite ignorant of the subject must discover, if intelligent and attentive, that some things which the editor tells him, for instance at 361–70, cannot possibly be true. What is taken at second hand is not always verified, and Bouché-Leclercq's prodigious blunder (astr. Gr. p. 374) about Hor. carm. i 12 50 orte Saturno is introduced at 509 as if original. Unconscious ignorance here and there exults too merrily, and it cannot be said that Mr Garrod's attainment in scholarship corresponds to his pretensions. Few will listen to a lecture at 747 sq. on elision in Latin poetry from a metrist who has not found time to read even his own text of one book of Manilius, and does not know what he has printed at 3 and 275 and 341 and 385 and 542 and 860. Few at 740, in a note which is to supersede the authority of Lachmann, will want to read further than the words 'fluuuii in Aen. III 702 = fluuji, cf. Georg. i 482 fluujorum'. But this seems to be a sort of English book which Germans admire, as they once admired Wakefield's Lucretius, and it was greeted as 'Garrods trefflicher Kommentar', 'das herrliche Werk', 'das vortreffliche Buch'. There were no such bouquets for me ; and perhaps the reader will do well to consider how far my judgment of Mr Garrod's performance may have been warped by the passion of envy.

It is comprehensible that Breiter and Mr Garrod should aspire to edit Manilius, or a book of Manilius, and should attempt the enterprise ; but why Jakob van Wageningen took it into his head that the world would be the better for an edition from him, and fetched his paste and scissors to this particular spot, I cannot imagine.

For the text which he published with Teubner in 1915 he professed to have collated G and L himself and to have procured photographs of M. Yet the apparatus criticus contains more than 200 false reports of the MSS, and much of this falsehood is borrowed falsehood. In book III alone there are 25 places where he has copied Breiter's mistakes instead of consulting the MSS themselves ; and some of those mistakes are gross indeed : at IV 585 tit., where L has distributis ad signa, Breiter, and therefore van Wageningen, cites ad signa descriptis. The number of conjectures which he ascribes to those who were not their authors is nearer 300 than 200 ; and although my editions of books I and II had already appeared, and correction was there if he wanted it, he would not look. He had not learnt to write an apparatus criticus. I 521 text idem semper erit quoniam semper fuit idem, note idem G, isdem ML : in which place ? the same unanswerable question will be asked at III 242 sex and IV 86 omne. v 261 text conseret et ueris depinget prata figuris, note consereret M : instead of what ? most will guess wrong, and again at 684 quoqueret. He had not even learnt to read an apparatus criticus : he shows ignorance of the lections of the cod. Flor. in dozens of places where Bechert's silence had made them known to every instructed student. The text is neither conservative nor intelligently amended ; conjectures are admitted without respect of merit, the last dregs of Breiter and the topmost froth of Mr Garrod are gulped down together, and the MSS are nowhere more readily deserted than where their tradition is sound. Of his own conjectures, which are few, I can accept only one. The index is almost as full of errors as the apparatus criticus, and p. 187 reveals that in the verse qualis Eretheos pestis populata colonos he supposed Eretheos to be a genitive of the 3rd declension.

The Latin commentary was separately published in 1921 with no small magnificence by the royal academy of sciences at Amsterdam. What it most resembles is a magpie's nest. With the rarest exceptions, all that it contains of any value, whether interpretation or illustration, is taken from others, and usually without acknowledgment. A reader new to the author and the editor might mistake van Wageningen for a man of learning ; but with my knowledge of both I can trace every stolen penny to the pouch it came from. On p. 41 the note of seventeen lines upon verses 149–166 may seem to indicate a considerable amount of reading, and so it does, for it is from Ed. Mueller de Pos. Man. auct. p. 2. On pp. 43 sq. thirty-three consecutive lines, equally impressive, are a mosaic put together from pp. 3 and 4 and 7 of the same treatise and from F. Malchin de auct. quib. qui Pos. libr. met. adhib. pp. 15 sq. P. 178 consists of thirty-seven lines : seventeen of them are mine. From those of his predecessors who wrote in Latin he copies many whole sentences word for word, especially from Fayus and me.* I am his chief resource in books I and III ; my fourth volume appeared when his compilation was nearing completion and is therefore plundered less ; in book II his wants were so abundantly supplied by the ampler and more elementary commentary of Mr Garrod that he left mine unread, only dipping into it here and there.

The true character of his activities peeps out amusingly in trifles. At II 175–7 ōpῶν for ωρῶν is a misprint of Bouché-Leclercq's, at 468 haerent for haerens is a misprint of Mr Garrod's, at v 605 'Col. XII 48 2' is a false reference from Georges' lexicon. On p. 116, having copied much incorrect information about the contents of II 150–264 from Scaliger, Jacob, and Bouché-Leclercq, he proceeds 'nomina Graeca, quae addidi, . . . partim apud Ptolemaeum Tetrab. I 12, II 175–196, 664–670 inueniuntur (Bouché-Leclercq l'astr. Gr. p. 153).' There are no such places in Ptol. tetr. as 'II 175–196, 664–670': in Bouché-Leclercq these are references to Manilius. At III 221 my words 'quam sol orbem suum diurnum incipiens tenuerit' are transcribed in such a hurry that he has written 'diuturnum'. At IV 206 Palamedeis he has 'Firmicus Libram fingit ab homine portatam, qui homo Palamedes, bilancis inuentor, esse dicebatur a nonnullis (Ampel. lib. mem. 2 7)'. Ampelius calls him not Palamedes but Mochos: van Wageningen has blundered in copying from Bouché-Leclercq astr. Gr. p. 141 n. 2, and van Wageningen's blunder is copied by Mr J. G. W. M. de Vreese Petron 39 u.d. astr. p. 132. At V 155 he says 'ambitio: cupiditas alios alliciendi, aliis placendi, cf. Hor. C. I 36 20: lascivus ederis ambitiosior'. The explanation is Breiter's, the citation Huet's, and they obviously conflict; but he was too busy with his fingers to notice that.

Some of his thefts he took measures to dissemble. Sextus empiricus, whose polemical treatise is the best introduction to Greek astrology, he had never read, and almost every word of that author which appears in his notes has been taken from mine. But he had enough originality to alter my references, and if I wrote $\pi\rho\delta\sigma\alpha\sigma\tau\rho$. 70 he substituted 'adu. math. 70', which he supposed to mean the same thing. It does not even mean anything: 'adu. math.', if the poor pilferer did but know it, is a work in six books, of which $\pi\rho\delta\sigma\alpha\sigma\tau\rho$. is the fifth. But envy rather than shame is his usual motive for disguise, and he will name a false source to conceal the true. At I 424 non posse timens I had noted that non posse meant ne non posset and had remarked upon this rarer sense, neglected by grammarians and lexicographers, of the infinitive after timere. Thereupon he wrote 'non posse timens pro ne non posset, cf. Kühner L.G. II² I 667 a', where of course there is not a word on the subject. At I 871 I said 'modo, postmodo', citing parallels, unknown to the dictionaries and grammars, from Lucr. II 1133–5 and other classical poets. Eight years later Mr Loefstedt explained the word in Lucretius similarly, citing no parallel from any classical author. This enabled van Wageningen to write 'modo, postmodo, Lucr. II 1133–1135 (Löfst. Per. 242)'. At III 257 his inapposite references to Bouché-Leclercq and Boll are means of diverting attention from the fact that his note is a reproduction of mine.

In adorning her humble home with extraneous objects the magpie is not more helped by her freedom from scruple than she is hindered by her defects of taste and judgment. Diamonds and broken glass are all one to her, and she picks up and carries off what a discriminating thief would leave in the gutter. At II 1 Mr Garrod had made the irrelevant and unhappy remark that Homer was held by some to be $\alpha\sigma\tau\rho\omega\lambda\gamma\sigma$: a fact which Manilius, if it occurred to him, took good care not to mention. Van Wageningen, having read this note and forgotten his own text, said 'I–II Homerus laudatur primus uates et astrologus'. At II 31 sq. the devoted daughter of Icarus is described as pietate ad sidera ductam | Erigonē, on which Mr Garrod wrote 'pietate: because Erigone=Virgo=Iustitia'. This is a mistake which can never have been made before, but van Wageningen hastens to make it again, 'Erigonē=Virginem=Iustitiam'. At II 41, where motus means emotions, Mr Garrod in his translation rendered it by 'notes', but cited in his commentary Verg. georg. I 350 and Hor. carm. III 6 21, where it means dances. Van Wageningen mixes

the two mistakes : ‘motus=modos, modulationes, cf. Verg. G. i 350, Hor. C. iii 6 21’. At ii 43 Mr Garrod, misled by its title, supposed Nicander’s θηριακά to be a book about hunting, and van Wageningen therefore expresses the same opinion. At iii 13 he writes ‘quos ex Iasone filios suscepserat Medea, eos membratim discerptos in illius conspectu ex alta turri deiecit’: this is credulously copied from Fayus, with three verbal alterations. At iii 296 he volunteers the statement ‘uerbum ὠροσκοπεῖν apud Sextum Empiricum’—whom, as I said before, he never read—‘significat horam partus obseruare, sed uerbum Latinum aliam uim assumpsit’. This gratuitous falsehood he took from the lexicons: the truth is that Sextus uses ὠροσκοπεῖν just as Manilius uses horoscopare, and so do the Greeks in general. At iv 231–3 he writes ‘subiungere currus sc. equis, constructio inuersa pro uulgari: equos currui’, ‘ad frena, praepositio modum et rationem indicat=habenis flexibilibus’, ‘totis=omnibus’: Fayus made these three mistakes in these three verses, so van Wageningen must make them anew.

His own original contributions offer little temptation to larceny, and he might say with Iago ‘who steals my purse, steals trash’. He writes for readers who crave such lore as ‘Colchida: Medeam.—parentis: Aeetae’ or ‘Chelarum=Librae’ (at v 295, after the word has occurred a dozen times), or ‘diuersā’ i 248, ‘rēdūces’ iii 12, ‘mixtā’ 133, ‘sinuantis in undam’ iv 604, ‘et sōlā uos’ 757, ‘sociā per mutuā dote’ v 680. Well for them if all the information supplied them were equally true; but they have an ignorant instructor. Ignorant of fact: he thinks that the southern hemisphere of stars is invisible from the north pole for half the year only (iii 378 ‘effugit: sc. pars inferior’), that nights are shortest when the sun is in Capricorn (iii 639 ‘tenebrasque resoluit sc. in minimum horarum numerum’), and even apparently that midsummer comes 365 times a year (iii 420 ‘usque... indicat... id quod cotidie solet fieri’). Ignorant of fable: v 92 ‘hoc alibi non traditur, a Salmoneo pontes aeneos factos esse, per quos quadrigam suam ueheret’: no editor of Manilius had cited Seru. Aen. vi 585, so how was he to know of it? Prodigiously ignorant of Latin. At i 926 he explains non quaerat as ‘desideret’, i.e. quaerat. At iii 296 he talks of an interrogative adverb quandoque. iii 527 ‘nec in cunctos seruat fortuna tenorem, ‘erga cunctos fortuna se infidelem praebet’. iv 77 sq. ‘degenerant nati patribus uincunque parentes | ingeniumque suum retinent’: ‘ingenium a patribus acceptum (suum)’. iv 138 sq. ‘in trepido... pectore: quale in oue est’: the ouis is proverbially placida, but he thought that trepidus meant timidus. iv 168 ‘annonae incendia, ‘robiginem in frumento’. iv 655 ‘radicis odores: arbores odoriferas’. iv 829 ‘natat: σαλεύεται’. v 577 ‘concitat aerios cursus: cito cursum per aera conficit. Accusatiuus uerbalis est’. v 652 ‘tenuis ausus... gressus (funambulus), ‘lente audens procedere’. His grammatical obtuseness is perhaps best displayed by the things which he takes for parallels. i 908 ‘iurata... arma: bellum iure iurando susceptum, cf. Cic. ad Att. i 1 1: iurauit morbum’: he found this in the dictionary, and did not know that it meant ‘morbum iuratus excusauit’. At ii 468 sq. ‘auribus haerent | aut odium foedusue gerunt, where aut and ue are not coordinate, he quotes (from Kuehner’s grammar) a passage of Cicero where they are. iii 679 ‘in auersum LM, in aduersum G: the sense should be ‘in the reverse direction’, and I gave in auersum, pointing out that i 684 is different: van Wageningen writes ‘in aduersum (i 684) fere idem atque contra, cf. Verg. Aen. ix 211 si quis in aduersum rapiat casusue deusue’, where aduersum means adversity. At iv 182 ‘uiuere uicto he says ‘uicto pro rapto, cf. Plaut. Rud. 621:

facite hic lege potius liceat quam ui uicto uiuere' : he sees there the same two words side by side, and how should he know that uicto is not abl. neut. with uiuere but dat. masc. with liceat? iv 683 'ignis pro puella amata etiam apud... Hor.... Sat. ii 3 276': that is ignem gladio scrutare, which he evidently connects with Helladē percussa in the next verse. iv 909 'et post nec habet uim aduersatiuam': this I had pointed out, citing a parallel; but van Wageningen proceeds 'cf. Ou. Met. XIV 842', a passage where nec... et correspond like nec... nec or et... et.

Such a scholar cannot hope to understand the language or follow the thought of a Latin author. If a schoolboy were shown the words tantae molis minimum deprendere punctum, even without their context, he would probably translate them right; but van Wageningen's note on III 215 is 'tantae molis sc. est, cf. Verg. Aen. i 33'. If a schoolboy were shown the words animis haerentia pectora, especially in their context at ii 676, he might well wonder what they could possibly mean; but he would not think, as van Wageningen did, that they could possibly mean 'pectora quae facile se cum aliis iungunt'. If he were shown the verses ii 849-51, he would not indeed understand them, but he would have the wit, which van Wageningen had not, to construe the exercita of 851 with the tempora of 850 and not with the pars of 849. In an enumeration of the four elements, i 249 aeris atque ignis, terrae pelagique iacentis, who else, even if he had not read 536 pontum terrasque iacentes, would think that iacentis meant quiescentis? Who else, even if he had not read i 297 septem... stellae certantes lumine, would miss the sense of v 141 sq. certantes luce... Pleiadas and explain 'omnes conantes simul reddere lumen'? But van Wageningen could miss the sense of anything. At ii 603 sq. Manilius, having filled some 50 verses with the various and complicated enmities subsisting between the several signs of the zodiac, and consequently between the men born beneath them, makes the remark in multis quoniam discordia signis | corpora nascantur, pax est sublata per orbem. Van Wageningen interprets 'cum multitudo signorum magna sit'—there are only 12—'h.e. cum tanta sit copia horoscoporum'. At iii 265 ibi means 'in octaua parte Cancerī': he explains it as 'ab initio Cancerī ad Capricornū', which not only is manifestly impossible but makes outrageous nonsense. iv 836 fugeruntque nouas ardentia sidera flamas: 'ardentia sidera, cf. Ou. Met. ii 171-177; Man. i 748': in vain did Manilius think out his pretty conceits, and in vain do I explain them. At ii 805 he joins uincula bina, which Bentley had put asunder, and as this is arithmetically false he says 'bis (proprie quater)'. At iv 46 (Marius) consul totiens (i.e. sexies) exul... adiacuit Libycis... ruinis he writes 'consul totiens sc. septies... sed sexies consul fuerat, cum exul in Africam fugit'. iv 711-4, because different lands belong to different signs, idcirco, says Manilius, in uarias leges uariasque figurās | dispositum genus est hominum, proprioque colore | formantur gentes sociataque iura per artus | materiamque parem priuato foedere signant, i.e. sociata per artus iura paremque materiam signant priuato foedere, the human form common to all is varied by national peculiarities. Van Wageningen construes and interprets thus: 'sociata iura... priuato foedere signant, societatem ineunt, quam foedere sanciunt, ut priuati in pace inter se uiuant.—per artus materiamque parem (adiectuum parem ad utrumque substantium pertinet): propter similitudinem corporis atque indolis'. On the other hand he can construe what others cannot. At i 455 the antarctic sky is cardine tam simili fultum quam uertice, which puzzles us much, because cardo and uertice are synonyms. But van Wageningen comes to our rescue:

he informs us that uertice means uertice septentrionali, that quam uertice septentrionali means quam est uertex septentrionalis (this he calls ‘comparatio compendiaria’, which is the name for κόμαι Χαρτεσσιν ὁμοῖαι, but he is confusedly thinking of the ablatius comparationis, melior fratre for melior quam frater est, and thence creating a third form melior quam fratre), and finally that cardine tam simili quam uertex septentrionalis est means cardine uerticis septentrionalis simili.

He does not shrink from open falsehood. I 432 ‘ut olim, cum Iuppiter Aram constituit, maxima erant sidera, quibus usus est, sic nunc quoque maxima manserunt (moneo propter Bentleium, qui legit : fulget)’. To have written this under any circumstances would have been to profess gross and wilful ignorance of the starry heavens: to write it after Bentley’s note is something worse. III 325 ‘qui fastigia terrae rotundae concendit, ei motus grauis est’. Not only do we all know from experience that this is false, but Manilius himself in this very passage, 328 sq. orbem scandens . . . rotundum | degrediere simul, and in three other verses, I 205, 233, 241, has taken the trouble to say that the curve of the globe is no more uphill than downhill. But van Wageningen had to choose between contradicting the notorious truth and abandoning a stupid conjecture which he had formerly adopted from Breiter; and this is how he chose. IV 606–9 ‘mare per fretum Siculum se effundit in mare apertum Ionum, sed prius pontus mare Hadriaticum efficit’. If he is willing to say this for the sake of a conjecture of his own, it is only bare decency to do as much for a lection of the MSS; and at IV 637 he again ventures to hope that his readers have no maps, and tells them that the Cyclades are ‘inter se congruentes magnitudine’.

His opinions, not being his own, were not permanently held, but picked up and dropped again, and he lived from hand to mouth on the borrowed beliefs of the moment. On p. 263 he says of book v ‘occasuum commemoratio, quae fortasse ducentos uersus complectebatur, interiit’; on p. 265 he repeats the statement, ‘haec pars libri quinti, ut iam supra animaduerti, in lacuna, quae uersum 710 excipit, interiit’; but when he comes to that verse, on p. 317, he says, ‘de occasu . . . siderum . . . nihil erat in hac parte carminis, ut optime demonstrauit Bollius’. I 801 ‘et . . . que non defendi potest’: III 851 ‘et respondet sequenti coniunctioni que (cf. I 801)’. II 501 ‘Libra . . . se ipsam uidet’: on the same page ‘Libra se ipsum audit, Arietem uidet.’ At III 189 he gives ducere a particular sense and renders it by ἀπολύειν; on the same page he says that ἀπολύειν has only the opposite sense, citing Bouché-Leclercq as his authority; and what Bouché-Leclercq says is that it has both senses equally. IV 186 mores lucentur: ‘e moribus suis lucrum faciant, cf. v 320: poenamque lucretur’: when he gets to that verse he explains it not as ‘e poena lucrum faciat’ but as ‘scelus impune committat’. At IV 283 he says that effindere depends on necesse est 281, not knowing that in his text he has given Jacob’s punctuation, which obliges it to depend on attribuunt 289. IV 797–9 ‘supra Aegyptus (752) sub Ariete erat, mox sub Scorpione (779)’: but at that verse he had said ‘Aegypti latus: Cyrenen’. V 45 ‘cf. IV 109: fraudare in praemia’: turn thither, and you find in praemia explained as depending not on fraudare but on donis.

Hitherto I have been ranging through the commentary at large and culling samples of its quality: now, to show that I have made no unfair selection, I will examine its texture in the first two pages. I 1: he cites ‘II 105 quis caelum possit nisi caeli munere nosse’: the verse is 115 and his own text gives posset, but he has copied 105 and possit from Bouché-Leclercq. 1–2: the reference to Virgil is from Scaliger (I am not implying that acknowledgement was due). 2: the references to Plotinus and Augustine are from Bouché-Leclercq astr. Gr. p. 600 n. 2 and p. 620 n. 3. 3: he says that caelestis rationis opus means ‘laborem deducendi et aggrediendi’ in apposition to the sentence, because I said that it did not; but at iv 390 he forgets that fact and therefore abandons that opinion. 4–6 aggredior primus... nouis Helicona mouere | canticis, ... hospita sacra ferens nulli memorata priorum: Manilius says, as he says again in books II and III, that he is the first poet to sing of astrology, a theme new to Helicon. Van Wageningen understands him to mean that he is the first Roman poet to sing of astrology, a theme new to Italy. This mistake he inherited from Fayus and Breiter, and was confirmed in it by his oracle Boll, who said that hospita meant ‘hellenisch’, as if Helicon itself were not Hellenic. 4–5: the three references to Virgil are from Cramer de Man. eloc. p. 62. 5–6: he argues against Gronouius’ conjecture ad in a way which shows that he had not read Gronouius and only knew of it from others. 7: he says that Horace carm. i 2 50 called Augustus pater patriae, which Horace did not.

In my addenda to books I–IV I have borrowed from van Wageningen and Mr Garrod whatever I thought worth borrowing; and my superstitious practice of acknowledging obligations will enable anyone to see how little it is. I will now end with a few remarks, particular and general, on my own work, first referring the reader to vol. I pp. lxxii sq., where I stated its design.

The true rule of numeration in a poet’s text is that the verses, whatever their order, should be numbered according to their order in the MSS; but it is now too late for applying it to Manilius. Lachmann could apply it to Lucretius in 1850, because the primitive sequence had not been much disturbed in the editions and his readers would not be much incommoded by the reform. But in Manilius, whose editors have been forced to make great changes of order, and have habitually ignored them in their numeration, reform would bring chaos. The early editions are without numeration; Scaliger numbered by the lines of his own pages; continuous numbering began with Fayus and followed the printed order of verses in each successive recension, concealing the transpositions which had brought it about. From 1846 to the end of the 19th century the text in common use was Jacob’s, and references to Manilius in the learned literature of all that age are according to his numeration. I therefore, had I been his immediate successor, should have followed it, deceptive though it was, without any divergence. But Bechert in 1900 deserted it in a few places and substituted a numeration corresponding to the sequence of verses in the MSS: at I 742 743, II 673–686, IV 666 667, V 264–510, 514 515, 529 530, 543–728. These improvements, because such they are, and because the change is small and not confusing, I have adopted ; and I have proceeded to others * in the same direction at i 805–812 and iii 468–474. Breiter in 1907 reverted to Jacob's numeration ; van Wageningen wavers between Breiter and Bechert.

The apparatus criticus is embedded in the commentary and the two are closely interwoven ; and that is as it should be. The usual separation of inseparable things, interpretation and criticism, is injurious to both but especially to the latter. It is the expedient of editors who wish to shirk discussion of their text because they fear that they could not defend it. Criticism apart from interpretation does not exist ; and 'critical edition' is the most inappropriate of all names for the thing to which custom applies it, an edition in which the editor is allowed to fling his opinions in the reader's face without being called to account and asked for his reasons.

Most of the errors of an author's MSS have no place in what Cobet calls an 'apparatus uere criticus', and mine excludes them. Variations of orthography are collected in an appendix. An evidently false reading given by a single MS, where the rest are agreed upon an evidently true one, I seldom record unless the difference is in some way noteworthy ; but since M is the sole survivor of one family, and L in places may be the only true witness to the archetype of the other, I mention their peculiar errors oftener than those of G or L². A false reading found in two authorities, as many are found in GL or GL² or LM, I always register unless the error is insignificantly small. From the Venetus I cite only true readings, readings which support another MS where MSS disagree, and readings conspicuously divergent and indicative of its character. Readings of the Cusanus and the later MSS I mention only as I mention the conjectures of editors ; except that where M is not clearly legible I sometimes adduce the decipherments of its apographs.

'Operam maximam eamque satis fastidiosam posui in primo emendationis cuiusque auctore inuestigando'. I am one of the few who can echo these words of Lachmann's : most editors have souls above such things, and some of them so much prefer error to knowledge that even when we patient drudges have ascertained the facts for them they continue to disseminate misinformation. There is another set of facts which I am almost alone in commemorating, for it is desired to suppress them. Many a reading discovered by conjecture has afterwards been confirmed by the authority of MSS ; and I record the occurrence, as instructive, instead of concealing it, as deplorable. The resistance of conservatives to true emendation is perpetual, and to enjoy credit in the future they must obliterate their past. When therefore a conjecture has turned out to be a manuscript reading, and they have gnashed their teeth and accepted it as such, they try to make the world forget that they formerly condemned it on its merits. Its author, who bore the blame of its supposed falsehood, is denied mention after the establishment of its truth ; and the history of scholarship is mutilated to save the face of those who have impeded progress.

There is an industriously propagated legend that many of my own corrections are ‘violent’ or ‘palaeographically improbable’, by which it is merely meant that they alter a good number of letters.* Violence and palaeographical improbability do not consist in that : they consist in ignoring the habits of copyists ; and the terms should not be used by those to whom the habits of copyists are imperfectly known. A conjecture which alters only a single letter may be more improbable palaeographically than one which leaves no letter unaltered. The greatest change which I have admitted is none of my own but Breiter’s quaeue (iacent) for contra (iacet) in II 253, which is what Manilius must have written. It is less violent, presumes less unwonted behaviour in the scribes, than the universally accepted conjecture quorum for quarum in III 300 ; and quorum has worse features than violence. If I had to name three of my own conjectures which I judge to be quite certain, I should be inclined to choose I 423 eguit Ioue for esurcione, IV 800 ubi ab his ope sumpta for ubi pisce suruptor, and V 461 uix una trium for atri luxum ; two of which, I can well believe, will make the hair stand up on many uninstructed heads.

The first virtue of an emendation is to be true ; but the best emendations of all are those which are both true and difficult, emendations which no fool could find. It is humiliating to reflect how many of the type commonly called brilliant,—neat and pretty changes of a letter or two—, have been lighted upon, almost fortuitously, by scholars whose intellectual powers were beneath the ordinary. Textual criticism would indeed be a paradise if scribes had confined themselves to making mistakes which Isaac Voss and Robinson Ellis could correct. But we know by comparing one ms with another that they also made mistakes of a different character ; and it is these that put a good emendator on his mettle. First he must recognise them, then he must deal with them suitably. Anxious adherence to the ductus litterarum is the fruitful parent of false conjectures. It seduced even such men as Scaliger and Porson : it led Scaliger to write ultimus ex solido tetrans in iv 757 ; it made Porson spoil his famous correction of Eur. Ion 1115 by omitting a necessary particle. The merits essential to a correction are those without which it cannot be true, and closeness to the MSS is not one of them ; the indispensable things are fitness to the context and propriety to the genius of the author. The question whether the error presupposed was great or small is indeed a question to be asked, but it is the last question. With vulgar judges it is the first, though usually the last as well. This detail is their favourite criterion, because it can be discerned, or they think it can, by a bodily sense, without disturbing the slumbers of the intellect.

It surprises me that so many people should feel themselves qualified to weigh conjectures in their balance and to pronounce them good or bad, probable or improbable. Judging an emendation requires in some measure the same qualities as emendation itself, and the requirement is formidable. To read attentively, think correctly, omit no relevant consideration, and repress self-will, are not ordinary accomplishments ; yet an emendator needs much besides : just literary perception, congenial intimacy with the author, experience which must have been won by study, and mother wit which he must have brought from his mother's womb.

It may be asked whether I think that I myself possess this outfit, or even most of it ; and if I answer yes, that will be a new example of my notorious arrogance. I had rather be arrogant than impudent. I should not have undertaken to edit Manilius unless I had believed that I was fit for the task ; and in particular I think myself a better judge of emendation, both when to emend and how to emend, than most others.

The following stanza of Mr de la Mare's ' Fare well ' first met my eyes, thus printed, in a newspaper review.

Oh, when this my dust surrenders
 Hand, foot, lip, to dust again,
 May these loved and loving faces
 Please other men !
 May the rustling harvest hedgerow
 Still the Traveller's Joy entwine,
 And as happy children gather Posies once mine.

I knew in a moment that Mr de la Mare had not written rustling, and in another moment I had found the true word. But if the book of poems had perished and the verse survived only in the review, who would have believed me rather than the compositor ? The bulk of the reading public would have been perfectly content with rustling, nay they would sincerely have preferred it to the epithet which the poet chose. If I had been so ill-advised as to publish my emendation, I should have been told that rustling was exquisitely apt and poetical, because hedgerows do rustle, especially in autumn, when the leaves are dry, and when straws and ears from the passing harvest-wain (to which ‘harvest’ is so plain an allusion that only a pedant like me could miss it) are hanging caught in the twigs ; and I should have been recommended to quit my dusty (or musty) books and make a belated acquaintance with the sights and sounds of the English countryside. And the only possible answer would have been ugh !

My first reception was not worse than I expected. I provoked less enmity and insolence than Scaliger or Bentley in proportion as my merits were less eminent and unbearable than theirs. But my disregard of established opinions and my disrespect for contemporary fashions in scholarship made the ignorant feel sure that I was greatly and presumptuously in error and could be put down without much difficulty ; and critiques were accordingly published which I do not suppose that their authors would now wish to rescue from oblivion. Not by paying any attention to any of them *, not by swerving an inch from my original principles and practice, but by the mere act of living on and continuing to be the same, I have changed that state of things ; and the deaf adder, though I can hardly say that she has unstopped her own ears, has begun to stifle her hisses for fear that they should reach the ears of posterity. Perhaps there will be no long posterity for learning ; but the reader whose good opinion I desire and have done my utmost to secure is the next Bentley or Scaliger who may chance to occupy himself with Manilius.

* Mr M. Schuster in Burs. Jahresb. vol. 212 p. 92 writes of my book III as follows. ‘Mit Befriedigung nimmt man hier gegenüber den beiden vorausgehenden Teilen ein gesteigertes Streben des Herausg.s wahr, dem überlieferten Wortlaut nach besten Kräften Treue zu halten. Vollmer hatte in seiner Besprechung der Ausgabe des ersten Buches die allzugrosse Freigebigkeit H.s mit Konjekturen bemängelt ; das verdross Herrn H. und ebenso unwillig wie ungebührlich sprach er von einen “stolid conservatism” Vollmers : indes hat er doch nachträglich, wie es scheint, aus seines Rügers Mahnung die gebührende heilsame Lehre gezogen, so dass die Kritik in diesem Falle die besten Früchte trug, die sie überhaupt bringen kann.’ Dulce et decorum est pro patria mentiri. ‘Stolid conservatism’ is a phrase which I have never used in my life. The hard things which I did say of Vollmer were said not after his review, on which I made no comment, but before it ; they were said in the work which he reviewed. And, far from employing conjecture with less freedom in the later books, I employed it with more, because they are more corrupt.

My thanks are due to the Earl of Leicester and the authorities of the Bodleian Library for sending mss to Cambridge for my inspection, and to Professor A. C. Clark, Mr F. W. Hall, and Mr R. A. Wilson, who from time to time have answered my enquiries touching books in Oxford and in the British Museum.

In his Fifth book Manilius rehearses the diurnal risings of the extra-zodiacal constellations, specifies or forgets to specify the degree of the ecliptic which rises simultaneously with each, and describes the various qualities engendered by these postures of the heavens in children born at the moment of their occurrence. Here therefore the horoscope or ascendant, first made prominent in IV 502–84, has become the controlling element in the geniture, although in IV 122–293, as I have now pointed out, the sign occupied by the Moon appears to be that which stamps its character on the native. The zodiacal signs are here δωδεκατημόρια, not ζύδια (ἀστερισμοί), or they would not contain, as they evidently do, 30 degrees each.

The συνανατολαί and ἀντικαταδύσεις of the northern and southern constellations, their rising with and setting opposite the several signs of the zodiac, are the subject of Arat. 559–732. But the aim of Aratus in writing that section of his poem is that men may be able to tell the hour of the night if the zodiacal sign itself is hidden by clouds or mountains, and he is content to name the sign without specifying the degree. Both he and his authority Eudoxus, whom he did not rightly understand, are sharply criticised and convicted of much grave error by Hipparchus in his 'Αράτου καὶ Εύδόξου φαινομένων ἐξήγησις, where he professes to set forth the true συνανατολαί and a great deal else with a precision which takes count even of half-degrees of the ecliptic.

συνανατέλλειν has a later synonym παρανατέλλειν (Seru. georg. I 218 Canis paranatellon est Cancri, id est cum eo oritur), and this was the term employed by those astrologers who took into account the influences of extra-zodiacal constellations and made them ingredients in the geniture. Its meaning was rightly explained by Salmasius ann. clim. p. 586, and on pp. 554 sq. he cited from Porph. isag. p. 200 and Psell. περὶ παραδ. ἀναγν. (Westermann p. 147) statements that the παρανατέλλοντα (or -εσ) were made to serve the purposes of astrology by Teucer Babylonius. This author, perhaps of the 1st century after Christ, is more than a mere name to us now that Boll in his sphaera pp. 16–58 and 490–538 has published from Greek and Arabic MSS substantial relics of his doctrine. In these a number of northern and southern constellations, part Greek part Egyptian, are brought in as παρανατέλλοντα to the several signs of the zodiac, or, with more precision, to the several δεκανοί or thirds of those signs (pp. 16–21, 494–538) and even to definite degrees of the ecliptic (pp. 41–5). In the excerpts printed on pp. 41–52 astrology is added to astronomy, and the influence exerted by the rising of these constellations upon the character and fortunes of the native is particularised as it is by Manilius. Cases of agreement I have noted in my commentary : they are not remarkable, the alleged effects being such as the names of the constellations would suggest to any astrologer.*

It is not correct to say that the συνανατολαί of Manilius are generally false, for in strictness they are neither false nor true, but indeterminate. When it is declared that such and such a constellation rises with such and such a degree of the ecliptic, the statement has no meaning until we know the latitude and the date to which it applies. If Manilius' statements apply to his own date and to the latitude of Rome, then indeed most or all of them are false ; but he is not so imprudent as to be explicit, and he never specifies either latitude or date. His latitude may be as far off as Alexandria, his date may be as far off as Eudoxus. Some of his statements are statements made by competent astronomers in other climes and times, but no competent astronomer ever or anywhere made them all, and whatever truth they originally had is necessarily lost by transference. When Scaliger says at v 39 'Manilius nesciebat quid scribebat' his judgment is sounder than his grammar. Manilius either gathered his συνανατολαί from various sources without grasping their irreconcilability, or else he found them already gathered by some astrologer who was no better an astronomer than himself.

* Equally without significance are the agreements between Manilius and C.C.A.G. v i p. 188 11–21, where we have prognostics drawn by Ἀσκληπιάδησ ὁ Μυρλεανὸς ἐν τῇ βαρβαρικῇ σφαιρᾳ not from παρανατέλλοντα but ἐκ τῶν τῇ σελήνῃ παραβαλλόντων, all exceedingly obvious : ἀρμέσει ἡ . . . Ἀργώ πλοιξομένοις (Man. v 40–56), . . . κυνηγοῖσ . . . ὁ Κύων (228–33), ὁ Ὁρίων (175–88), αἰπόλοισ . . . οἱ Ἐριφοὶ (115–7), . . . εὐωχλαισ ὁ Κρατήρ (244–6), . . . ὁ Ἀριάδνης στέφανος . . . ἥδυπαθέσιν (267–9), . . . ιερεῦσι τὸ Θυμιατήριον (344–7), . . . ιππεῦσιν ὁ Κένταυρος (350–2), ιπποδρομίαισ ὁ Πήγασος (636–41), . . . ἀκοντισταῖσ . . . ὁ Οιστός (294–7), . . . μουσικοῖσ ἡ Λύρα (329–36), . . . γεωργοῖσ . . . ὁ Στάχυς (271–5).

For he, when he came to write his fifth book, no longer possessed even so much astronomy as had sufficed him for writing his first ; and the celestial globe which he had then borrowed from a friend to teach him how the constellations lay and save him from lifting his eyes to heaven had long been restored to its owner. He makes the Hyades rise 9 degrees in advance of the Pliades, when the Pliades in any latitude must rise first. He makes the Haedi rise 10 degrees in advance of Capella, when in reality their risings are necessarily almost simultaneous. Only in five cases, Heniochus, Canicula, Crater, Cygnus, Cetus, do his statements approximate to experience or agree with the doctrine of any astronomer ; and in Argo, Orion, Sagitta, Ara, Arcturus, Ophiuchus, Piscis Notius, Cepheus, Aquila, Equus, Engonasin, he is extravagantly astray.

In five of these instances, Argo, Sagitta, Arcturus, Ophiuchus, Engonasin, the extent of his error happens to be about a quarter of the heavens, so that these constellations are really crossing the meridian, either above or below the earth, when the portions of the zodiac with which he connects them are rising. Hence it is inferred by Boll sph. pp. 381 sq. that Manilius' authority had here used the word παρανατέλλειν in a loose sense, to include μεσονυρανεῖν and ἀντιμεσονυρανεῖν and καταδύεσθαι ; and he shows on pp. 86 sq. that Teucer Babylonius makes some statements which are gravely erroneous unless he is stretching the word to that wider signification. When Boll attempts on pp. 88 and 364 sq. to establish this sense by citing Procl. in Plat. remp. ed. Kr. vol. II pp. 56 sq., he is guilty of imprudence or effrontery, for Proclus carefully distinguishes, διαφερόντωσ μὲν ἐν τῷ παρανατέλλειν, πάντωσ δὲ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἀλλών κέντρων, οἷον ἐν τῷ συμμεσονυρανεῖν ἢ συγκαταδύεσθαι ; but in a passage which he adduces on p. 87 from an astrologer of the 4th century after Christ, C.C.A.G. i p. 113 13, παρανατέλλειν is made equivalent to ἐπικεῖσθαι and comprises appearances in the μεσονύρημα and δύσισ and ὑπόγειον. There is however no reason to suppose that Manilius' authority or authorities thus misused the word παρανατέλλειν, if they even used it : the assumption would explain only five out of his many errors ; and there is only one of these five, the case of Engonasin, in which his statement coincides with Teucer's.

Scaliger in his second edition imposed on this book the title of sphaera barbarica, which is doubly a misnomer. The book is no sphaera or description of the heavens, and, if it were, it would be a sphaera Graecanica, like the first book. sphaera Graecanica and sphaera barbarica were the titles of two works by P. Nigidius Figulus, and of the latter we have one fragment from which we can learn its subject : Seru. georg. i 19 'Nigidius sphaerae barbaricae : sub Virginis signo arator, quem Horon Aegyptii uocant, quod Horon Osiridis filium ab hoc educatum dicunt.' Nigidius said that under (south of) * the zodiacal sign Virgo there was a constellation having the figure of a ploughman and the name of Horos. On the celestial globe of the Greeks this constellation did not exist ; but the figure of a ploughman stands in this place, under (south of) Virgo, on a relief in the temple of Hathor at Denderah (Boll sph. taf. III). It was a constellation on the celestial globe of the Egyptians. sphaera barbarica means a plan of the heavens, especially an Egyptian or Chaldaean plan, which groups the stars into constellations other than the Greek.† This appears from the examples of the term collected by Boll sph. pp. 350–66, whence I take the following. Proclus in Plat. remp. ed. Kr. vol. II p. 318 11 sq. σφαῖραις βαρβαρικαῖσι Αἰγυπτίων καὶ Χαλδαίων, Ioh. Philop. de opif. mundi VII 14 p. 307 21 sqq. ed. Verg. georg. I 229 ‘Septentriones, quos Graeci duas ursas uocant, Helicen et Cynosuram, in barbarica sphaera plaustrum esse, quod ducatur a bubus iunctis’.‡ A work with the title σφαῖρα βαρβαρική by Asclepiades Myrleanus is mentioned in C.C.A.G. v i p. 188 22 sq. : of its nature I will speak below.

Scaliger applied the name to this book of Manilius because of what he found in Firmicus. The twelve chapters Firm. math. VIII 6–17 are derived from Man. v, and Firmicus concludes them by saying ‘haec sunt . . . barbaricae sphaerae principia, haec est Chaldaici operis disciplina’. But in the next chapter 18 he proceeds to ‘ sequentes partes sphaerae barbaricae ’ and sets forth in 19–30 the effects of all the 360 degrees of the zodiac when found in the horoscope, with the addition here and there of a few παρανατέλλοντα, some of them the same as those already mentioned in 6–17 ; and in c. 31 he enumerates what he calls the ‘ clarae stellae ’ of the zodiac, with their effects when found in the horoscope, adding in the next chapter that this also is the doctrine of the sphaera barbarica. He therefore does not use the term as equivalent to the contents of Man. v, but in a wider acceptation ; and Man. v must not be called sphaera barbarica because Firmicus accounts its doctrine one portion of what he designates by that name.

* Schol. Germ. ed. Brieg. p. 173 9 sq. sub Ariete et Piscibus super Fluuium Cetus in caeli regione collocatus est, Germ. phaen. 87, 343, 433.

† Scaliger Man. v praef., Buecheler opusc. I pp. 108 sqq., and Swoboda quaest. Nigid. p. 48 were perversely wrong about the meaning of the term : Salmasius ann. clim. pp. 592 sq. was nearly right, for he said that Nigidius in his sphaera barbarica ‘opinionem Aegyptiorum sacerdotum perscripsit, qui alias causas commenti sunt τῆς καταστερίσεως corporum eorum caelestium aliasque illorum appellations habuerunt’; but he did not understand that the constellations themselves were in many cases different, not having the same forms and boundaries as the Greek constellations, nor consisting of the same stars.

Nor must it be called sphaera barbarica because it is concerned with παρανατέλλοντα. Boll sph. pp. 353–6 contends that the sphaera barbarica of Nigidius was also concerned with these. It probably was, for his sphaera Graecanica certainly was * ; but Boll’s method of proving his point is to ignore the plain sense of Nigidius’ words ‘ sub Virginis signo ’ and their exact agreement with the relief at Denderah, and to pretend that Nigidius means something which he does not say and the monument something which it does not show. Be that as it may, concern with the doctrine of the παρανατέλλοντα can form no part of the definition of the term sphaera barbarica, since Nigidius’ sphaera Graecanica likewise contained that doctrine ; and the sphaera Graecanica, or heaven of Greek constellations, which is the background of Man. v does not become barbarica because the παρανατέλλοντα are the chief theme of the book. The σφαῖρα βαρβαρική of Asclepiades (containing Greek and barbaric constellations mixed) was not concerned with παρανατέλλοντα but with τὰ τὴ σελήνη παραβάλλοντα, C.C.A.G. v i p. 188 11–23.

Though the sense which Firmicus attached to sphaera barbarica was far removed from the proper and original sense, it may yet be possible to explain the error or to trace the change. From Procl. in Plat. remp. ed. Kr. vol. II p. 318 11 sqq. ἐνετύχομεν σφαιραῖς βαρβαρικαῖς Αἰγυπτίων καὶ Χαλδαίων κατὰ τὰς μοίρας τοῦ ζῳδιακοῦ τὰς τῶν βίων διαφορὰς ὄριζούσαις it would appear that the astrologers who taught the doctrine set forth in Firm. VIII 19–30 made use of a celestial globe with barbaric and not Greek constellations : Firmicus then may have thought sphaera barbarica a good enough name for this doctrine, and may have stretched it to include the doctrine of Man. v, which he sets forth in 6–17, because in that doctrine also the degrees of the zodiac have a part to play. And indeed the lists of παρανατέλλοντα from Greek astrologers published by Boll sph.

* Seru. georg. I 218 ‘ Nigidius commentario sphaerae Graecanicae : oritur enim Canicula cum Cancro, in columnen uenit cum Geminis, occidit cum TAURO.’

pp. 16–58 contain many constellations with outlandish names and shapes, though the familiar Greek constellations are mixed up with them.

That Firmicus in writing VIII 6–17 had this book of Manilius before him was observed by Scaliger; and denial is idle. The proof lies not in the similarity or identity of the information, true or false, which they profess to impart, for in this they might be borrowing from a common authority, but in the cases where the choice vocabulary and ornamental flourishes of the poet reappear in Firmicus' prose. Man. 65 sq. 'limina peruolitans unumque per omnia uerbum | mane salutandi portans', Firm. 6 2 'per omnium limina matutinis semper salutationibus peruolabunt'; Man. 128 sq. 'ultima Lanigeri . . . pars . . . quae totum ostendit terris atque eruit undis', Firm. 6 7 'Arietis parte xxx, quae pars totum signum supra terram semper ostendit'; Man. 145 'sale mordaci dulcis quaerentia risus', Firm. 7 1 'qui salsi sermonis mordacibus dictis risus hominibus concitare consueuerint'; Man. 220–5, Firm. 10 1–2. Some of Firmicus' statements are mere misinterpretations of Manilius' flowers of speech: Man. 105 sq., Firm. 6 4; Man. 113, Firm. 6 5; Man. 124, Firm. 6 6. Manilius however was not the sole source from which these chapters of Firmicus are drawn. The proof of this does not lie in their divergencies. Many of these may with certainty or probability be laid at the door of Firmicus' scribes: Man. 175 Iugulae (Firm. eamae), 197 Procyon (argion), 633 Equus (aes or aces), 39 quattuor (om.), 197 sq. uicesima . . . septimaque (xx), 339 octo (i), 365 ter decuma (x), 631 uicesima prima (xx). Some seem to be Firmicus' conjectural attempts at repairing Manilius' obvious negligences: Man. 174 (i add. Firm.), 311 (xv), 389 (primis), 416 (VIII). Others, more serious, are apparently deliberate alterations by Firmicus of what he found in Manilius. In Man. 449 Cepheus rises with Aquarius, but Firm. 15 4 'in xv parte Capricorni', which is not quite so bad. In Manilius Lyra rises with Libra at 324 and Fides with Capricorn at 409: Firmicus omits Lyra in the one place and gives its name to Fides in the other, refusing to recognise the distinction. In Manilius the Piscis Notius rises at 394 and Delphinus, after Fides, at 416: Firmicus omits the Piscis Notius and puts Delphinus in its place, thinking them too similar in their nature and effects to be worth discriminating. But Firmicus in addition makes mention of astronomical objects, and their astrological effects, which are not to be found in Manilius and which would cause some surprise if they were. 7 5 'in fissione ungulae Tauri si fuerit horoscopus, et una hunc eundem locum beniuolae et maliuolae pariter aequata radiatione respexerint, pictorem facient, sed quem hoc studium famoso honore nobilitet. si uero sine testimonio beniuolarum stellarum hunc locum maliuolae solac minaci radiatione respexerint, gladiatores famosi nascentur, sed qui post multas palmas innumerabilesque uictorias in isto pugnarum studio minaci gladio cum magno spectantium plausu ac fauore moriantur' : this is lore which I have learnt from no other teacher. 12 2 'in hac parte (Librae VIII) Styx esse perhibetur' * : this comes from the barbaric sphere, Teuc. Boll sph. p. 48 2 sq. (Zυγῷ παρανάτελλει) Στυγὸς ὕδωρ. There is therefore no reason to suspect that the verses of Manilius lost between 709 and 710 contained the constellation Lychnus which appears in Firm. 17 8 and seems to be also barbaric, perhaps identical with ὁ τὰ λύχνα φέρων C.C.A.G. v i p. 188 21, Boll sph. p. 42 2 sq., ὁ κυνοκέφαλος ὁ τὰ λύχνα φέρων VII p. 195 4 sq., Boll sph. p. 16 fin., ὁ κυνοκέφαλος ὅστις ἐν μὲν τῇ ἀριστερᾷ αὐτοῦ χειρὶ κατέχει λύχνον, ἐν δὲ τῇ δεξιᾷ ἀνοικτήριον C.C.A.G. v i p. 157 5 sq., which is a παρανατέλλον of Aries ; and moreover the effects which Firmicus attributes to this Lychnus are those which Manilius attributed to Cassiope in 522–36 and which Firmicus at that place (16 3) omitted, whereas ὁ τὰ λύχνα φέρων according to Asclepiades ἀρμόσει δαδονυχίαισ and according to Teucer δηλοῖ κανδηλάπτασ.

Of the northern and southern constellations which he enumerated in i 315–442 Manilius in this book omits five, Deltoton, Perseus, Hydrus, Coruus, Flumina ; which is the more discreditable to him because he has again mentioned three of them, Flumina and Hydrus and Perseus, in his prooemium, uu. 14 and 16 and 22. On the other hand he adds the Iugulae, which are part of Orion, the Hyades and the Pliades † and Spica, which are parts of zodiacal signs, and a Haedus and a Fides which are phantoms.

Boll's contention at sph. pp. 266 sq. that the Fides of Man. v 409 is ἡ δυσώνυμος λύρα of Teucer ib. p. 50 19 and the λύρα of p. 20 and p. 49 33 I have refuted in my note on the verse ; but the other apparition is more of a puzzle. At 311 there rises with Libra a third Haedus, two having already risen, as they should, with Aries at 102. Boll sph. pp. 298 and 386 explained this interloper by reference to Teucer Babylonius ib. pp. 47 sq. τῷ Ζυγῷ παρανατέλλει . . . ἡγίοχοσ καὶ τροχὸσ καὶ τράγοσ and p. 19 = C.C.A.G. vii p. 204 (where ὁ τράγοσ τῆσ δωδεκαώρου is among the παρανατέλλοντα of VIII 474 sq.*), animo perhorrescunt [quae . . . applicatur].

† The Hyades and Pliades are mentioned in the spurious verses i 371 sq.

Libra), and to the marbles of Bianchini and Daressy (sph. taf. v and vi) where an inner circle (the δωδεκάροσ) shows a goat in the place which corresponds to the place of Libra in the circle of the zodiac ; and this τράγος again accompanies Libra in C.C.A.G. VIII iv p. 198 15-7 (ἀσελγὴσ ἀπὸ μέρουντ) Ζυγὸς διὰ τὸν τράγον τὸν παρανατέλλοντα. The δωδεκάροσ is a circle composed of the figures of twelve animals native to Egypt, not constellations, but apparently symbolising divisions of time, perhaps the stages of the lunar month : Teucer however is pleased to treat them as παρανατέλλοντα of the zodiacal signs.

To Boll's identification of Haedus with this τράγος, accepted, like everything else of Boll's, with shut eyes and open mouth by editors of Manilius who cast all their care upon him, there are obvious objections. First, the figure is named τράγος and not Ἐριφος,* and the name is more frequent than the figure. Second, its effects answer to its name : they are not the busy alertness and sprightliness described by Manilius, but ἀσέλγεια and πολυγονία (C.C.A.G. VII p. 205 1 sq., VIII iv p. 198 15-7). Third, the supposed blunder is extraordinary even in a poet and even in this poet. No other figure of the δωδεκάροσ has wandered into his pages, and there is no other indication that he had ever so much as set eyes on this Nilotica menagerie ; and, if he had, why was he deluded by this figure only of the twelve ? It will not do to say with Boll p. 387 that it was because the τράγος was 'fast ganz gleichnamig' with a Greek constellation ; for other of the figures were absolutely synonymous, κύων, ὄφις, λέων, ταῦρος.

But to account for this Haedus otherwise is no less difficult. It will apparently be necessary to postulate two errors, neither probable. First we must suppose that he misunderstood the occasional use of Haedus and "Εριφος instead of the plural (Hor. carm. III 1 28 orientis Haedi, Prop. II 26 56 purus et Haedus erit, Ouid. art. I 410 mergitur Haedus, Lyd. ostent. Wachsm. ed. 2 p. 135 I δ "Εριφος ἀνίσχει, sphaer. Empedocl. 23 "Εριφος, C.G.L. III p. 293 31 "Εριφος Haedus) and imagined that it was a separate star, perhaps further confused by coming across the term δ ἐπόμενος (the second of the two, e.g. Ptol. synt. VII 5, ed. Heib. vol. I ii p. 66 12 sq.) and failing to grasp its meaning. Then, to explain why he should connect Libra with this imaginary object, I can make no better suggestion than that he was vaguely conscious of the irrelevant fact that the evening rising of Haedi or Haedus took place when the sun was in that zodiacal sign (Colum. xi 2 73, Lyd. ostent. Wachsm. ed. 2 pp. 147, 149, 184, 291, 297).

In verse 28 we are promised an account of the effects produced by the northern and southern constellations not only at their rising but also ‘cum merguntur in undas’, that is, as Firmicus says VIII 6 10, ‘in occasu geniturae,’ ἀντικαταδύνοντα. This promise, if performed at all, can hardly have been performed in this book. Considering the length of the other books, we cannot assume that more than some 200 verses of this have been lost in the gap after 709; and these would not afford room for the missing matter. Scaliger supposed that it was treated in a sixth book, and that Firmicus derived from this source those sentences of his exposition which deal with the setting of the constellations. The second of these opinions is rightly rejected by Boll in sph. pp. 401–4. The effects of ἀντικατάδυσις in Firmicus, chiefly and almost wholly confined to the manner of death, are meagre and perfunctory inventions, conceived in his own dull verbiage, and not conveyed from the lively and pictorial pages of a Manilius. But Boll’s argument at sph. p. 388, that because Firmicus shows no knowledge of a sixth book of Manilius therefore Manilius wrote none, would prove that Manilius wrote no first or second or third or fourth book.

In 710–745 we come suddenly and unexpectedly upon a truncated piece of information which was never promised us and which has no proper relation to the theme of the book: a classification of the fixed stars in six orders of magnitude. This is not astrology but descriptive astronomy, and would have found an appropriate place in book i. And we have no true certainty that these verses are in fact a portion of book v and not of some later book. The mss do not so inform us, for GLM have no subscriptio at the end; and the dimensions of the gap after 709 are undiscoverable. But the last 65 lines of book III have little more business in that place than these have here: both passages are terminal ornament, and this passage is undeniably ornamental.

capitula in M a prima manu scripta sunt litteris maiusculis praeterquam ad III 160 et 537 et IV 866, ubi cum pro poetae uerbis habita essent minuscula scriptura exarata sunt.

etiam in G pleraque, nisi fallor, prima manus scripsit, et quidem maiusculis praeterquam ad I 566, II 150, 159, III 43. sed post addita esse quam ipsum carmen scriptum esset clare ostendunt spatia nimis arta et in marginem exundantia uerba ad II 433, III 1, 385, 510, ne addam tota in margine adscripta capitula ad I 566, II 150, 395, III 203.

in L usque ad I 666 capitula minusculis scripta sunt rubris, fortasse a prima manu, sed solito maioribus et crassioribus. in reliquo carmine spatia uacua relicta sunt capitulis qualia in M uel G habentur recipiendis accommodata: ipsa capitula minutis litteris in margine addidit manus minus antiqua L³ eo consilio ut a rubricatore contextui insererentur. sed index capitulorum libro II praemissus a prima manu scriptus esse uidetur quamuis minoribus quam quibus uti solet litteris.

ADDENDA TO I II III IV

BOOK I : PREFACE

p. vii l. 4. Traube Philol. 1907 p. 122 formed from photographs the opinion that G, like L, belongs to the 11th century and that L is somewhat the older of the two.

p. vii l. 5. I now have photographs of G, which show that Mr Thomas' collation was very accurate.

p. vii l. 7. For 1456 read 1465.

p. vii l. 11 'the hand of its original scribe'. So said Bechert de M. Man. emend. p. 10; but it is not so. Before the publication of my second volume I procured photographs of L, and they show that Jacob p. vi was right in distinguishing the corrector, whose hand, though nearly coeval and generally similar, is not only smaller (sometimes of necessity) but more elegant, and differs in its formation of certain letters, especially s. Further I agree with Mr P. Thielscher Philol. 1907 p. 111 that this chief corrector is not the only one; and in particular I must separate from the older hands, contemporary or nearly so with one another, some emendations in pale ink at I 657, 684, II 186, 431, 476, 491, 764, 799, III 4, 199, 344, 385, 418, IV 126, 203, 263, 298, 550, 718, which are not earlier than 1250 and ought not to be included under the title of L². I also agree with Jacob and Breiter that portions of the text are from hands other than that which wrote most of it, and with Mr Thielscher that those portions are the fifth book and a page or two of the third; but this is a matter of no importance for textual criticism.

A detail which deserves mention should perhaps be mentioned here. The diphthong ae is often written e or ē, but the ligature æ, if I am not mistaken, is original only in the aether of v 743: wherever else it occurs, as in the mensuræ of IV 205, it is a correction of a, as comparison will show, and sometimes means not ae but e, as in v 572, where andromachem is changed to andromæden.

p. vii l. 14. quanto in III 344 is not from L² but from the late hand of which I have just spoken: substitute therefore IV 243 uesta tuos L²G Ven., uastat uos L. But evidence that L² had access to a is very slight and scanty : II 399, Ven. being absent, is not a certain example, since the error manent may have arisen in a and not in L.

p. vii ll. 22 sqq. Add that M (for V can now be discarded) does not contain I 669 subsequiturque suo solem uaga Delia curru, 813–4 natalis euntes | protinus et rapti, II 523 sq. trigona | signa negant Chelis foedus totique, 542 gemini pisces quos pertulit unda.

p. viii l. 11 and p. lxix l. 11. Poggio's letter, according to Mr Garrod Class. Quart. 1909 p. 58, has not astronomicum but Astromicon. The title in M before book II is M. Manili astronomicon.

p. viii l. 13. ‘diuinare oportet, non legere’, as explained by Mr Stangl in Berl. Phil. Woch. 1913 pp. 1180–4, is a parenthesis and a precept, not a description of M's text.

p. viii ll. 14 sq. ‘Housman : “est Matrit. liber transcriptio facta per hominem doctum”’ Breiter vol. I p. vi. I suppose that English was one of the many things which he did not understand.

p. viii ll. 19–21. In 1907 I examined Loewe's collation in cod. MS philol. 139 of the Goettingen library, and before the publication of my second volume I obtained photographs of M.

p. viii ll. 22–8. In 1907 I procured photographs of V, and in the Classical Quarterly of that year, pp. 290–5, I showed that the opinion hazarded by Breiter in the Neue Jahrbuecher vol. 147 p. 421 (not 420) and ed. vol. I pp. vi sq. that V owes all it has of good to M, though hastily formed and not seriously held (for he continued to believe Ellis's statement, irreconcilable with that opinion, that M gave possidet for condidit at IV 776), was nevertheless true, and that the obstacles which had deterred me from acceding to it were only misreports of M by Ellis.

p. viii l. 29. The agreement of V with M begins between II 661 (retinet V cod. Cusanus, retinent M) and 665 (habet Cus., ht M, om. V; nec pingitur Cus., ne ciugitur M, nec iungitur V) or 668 (quadrato . . . templo Cus., quadrata . . . templa MV). Be it observed that Breiter's 674 is the same verse as my 684, quae quamquam etc., since he adopted the transposition and numeration of Jacob.

p. viii l. 32. For 420 read 421. Mr Garrod in the Classical Quarterly 1909 p. 59 said of V that ‘down to II 683 it follows the Belgian (GL) recension—as was pointed out by Ellis when he first called attention to M. (Housman assigns the merit of this important observation to Breiter)’. This is one of the flatteries with which Mr Garrod escorted his venerable neighbour to the grave, and not a word of it is true. Ellis did not make ‘this important observation’ nor did I assign its merit to Breiter, for it was I myself who made it. Ellis did not say what V followed ; he expressly declined to attempt an explanation of the phenomenon presented, and could not even make up his mind whether V or M was the composite ms. See Hermathena 1893 pp. 267 and 270. The observation that M and V are in close agreement only after a certain point in book II was made by Breiter and Ellis simultaneously ; the observation that V before that point is inferior and unimportant was made by Breiter and not by Ellis. This was the truth which I stated, and which did not lend itself to Mr Garrod's purpose.

Mr Thielscher in Philol. 1907 p. 118 has not, like Bechert, ignored Breiter's observation, but has ignored its truth, and has preferred his own fancies to the fact which Breiter pointed out.

p. ix ll. 1–33. That the Cusanus is a copy of L itself, not of a ms resembling L, was shown by Mr Thielscher Philol. 1907 p. 128. Breiter in 1854, de em. Man. p. 3, had noted that at III 399, where IV 10–313 are interposed in the family a, the Cusanus has these words (I correct his errors) : hic male est ordinata lectio. sed siuis eius ordinem rectum reperire, memento eam per ordinem alfabeti quaerere quo eam denotauimus. post hunc enim uersum ‘uicino tribuat p. c. t. l.’ debet ille sequi quem inuenieris post sex folia B littera denotatum, uidelicet istum ‘at quae nocturnis f. m. t.’ He observed that this letter B was nowhere to be found, and that the verse at quae nocturnis occurred not ‘post sex folia’ but post unum ; and he drew the obvious inference ‘apparet librarium ea uerba in margine eius quem describeret libri inuenisse’. But, though he remarked that L also has a marginal note at this place, he did not remark that its marginal note is the same, and that in L the verse at quae nocturnis does occur ‘post sex folia’ and has against it the letter B. This fact was noted in 1878 by Bechert de M. Man. em. rat. p. 23, but without any reference to the Cusanus ; and not till 1907 was the comparison made (by Breiter as well as Mr Thielscher) and the consequence drawn (not by Breiter) that the Cusanus is derived from L. It is certain, and needs no confirmation ; but confirmation may be found in what the two mss present at I 186 sqq. and 223 sq.

Mr Thielscher affirms in Philol. 1907 p. 116 and Rhein. Mus. 1907 pp. 49 sq. that the Cusanus was copied directly and without intermediary from L ; and this I judge to be true. I have indeed observed a few places where Cus. agrees with G and not with L or L², such as III 411 ut L, in G Cus., 679 auersum L, aduersum G Cus., IV 588 nascentem L, nascentemque G Cus., V 10 conscendere L, descendere

G Cus. ; but these mistakes or conjectures might easily be made in two mss independently, even the last, where decurrere stands immediately overhead. That Cus. in III 670 reads uertuntur with G instead of flectuntur with L is not a fact but an error of Bechert's, who also errs at III 605 and 669 ; that in v 392 it reads peplo with G instead of populo with L is an error of Breiter's.

Now if Cus. was directly copied from L, its many corruptions and interpolations must be part of that process, and all later mss in which they reappear must be derived from Cus. Among these, as I said, are V in its first portion and Voss. 1 ; and therefore their good readings, some of which I cited (add II 814 omne and v 241 credet Voss. 1), must be conjectures or accidents, and are not derived from the parent of the family a.

p. ix l. 13. The reading of Cus. at i 130 is not summa, which was a false report of Postgate's, but summum, as Bechert says.

p. ix ll. 14 sq. parati at III 395 is the reading also of L².

p. ix l. 17. The reading of Cus. at v 585 is not forcis but fortis.

p. ix ll. 34 sqq. The Venetus is described by Gronouius obs. III c. 15 as 'membranaceus Venetus coenobii D. Antonii,' which monastery, as Mr Thielscher points out in Rhein. Mus. 1907 p. 47, was burnt down in 1687, library and all, so that the ms is probably now no more. But the collation of Gronouius was sent to Bentley and transcribed by him into the margin of a copy of Scaliger's second edition, now Adv. d. 2. 13 in the library of Trinity College Cambridge, and was brought to light by Mr. Garrod in 1911 in his edition of book II pp. xlvi-liv, where he printed (with a few errors, mostly excusable) a selection from its readings. The Venetus, as I show on p. xiii of this volume, can now be recognised as a third independent witness to the tradition of the family a. Sometimes it agrees with G against L, whether in truth, as at v 92 pontibus G Ven., montibus L, or in falsehood, as IV 461 quintae L, quinae G Ven. ; much oftener with L against G, as in truth at II 8 profusos L Ven., profusas G, in falsehood at v 4 struxisset G, strinxisset L Ven. It is more corrupt and worse interpolated than either : for instance at IV 580 Babyloniacas summersa profugit] babilonia casum mersa profugit L, babilonias casus profugit G, babilonia casum mutauit Ven. ; and it has a cowardly trick of omitting things hard to read or understand, as IV 298 deganae dixere decanica gentes. But there are some forty places, beside those cited in vol. I pp. ix sqq., where it gives what is or seems to be the true reading or an approach to the truth, while G and L give readings further from the truth or false ; and in some of these it has the support of M, that is to say the other strain of tradition. I 90 alias, 184 fata (M), 332 cingentem, 361 nixo, 631 aeterna (M), 657 quocumque, 716 mirantur, 718 diductis, 749 referentia, II 91 tenet, 112 auctoris, 172 priori (M), 213 tunc, 449 per, 450 petens, 567 exortos, III 230 ille, 256 austro, 288 a sidere, 292 cadendi (M), 607 per, 617 mortis, 641 riget, IV 132 emere, 194 illa (M), 223 peragrant, 281 mundum (M), 480 nonum (M), 493 accumulans, 650 per inde, 691 threce, 877 census (M), V 23 necans, 43 transnare (M), 107 abruptum (M), 223 concita, 234 orta (M), 241 tibi, 281 fracturos silicis, 330 que in, 335 carmina (M). Two or three of these, in particular I 716 mirantur Ven., uibrantur GLM and III 641 riget Ven., figit M, fugit GL, must be conjectures, and perhaps all of them may be.

pp. x sq. When Breiter, to whom I sent a copy of my first volume, had read the information I gave on these pages about the two codd. Vrbinates, he set off post-haste for Rome, discovered them himself, and published his discovery in the Woch. f. klass. Phil. 1904 pp. 669–72. There are therefore now in Germany two sects of opinion concerning these mss : some hold that they are of value and were brought to light by Breiter, others that they are of no value and were brought to light by me. Because I had called them U and R, Breiter called them u² and u¹; for his statement in vol. I p. vi that he followed Bechert in this notation is false. Because I had said that they were mutually independent, he said that R might be regarded as a copy of U. In the Class. Quart. 1907 pp. 296–8, having obtained photographs of both, I gave further information ; and I demonstrated their mutual independence by the observation, which Breiter, with the mss in his hands, had not made, that each contains verses which the other omits.

To U and R must now be added H, Holkhamicus 331 saec. xv, seen by Ellis and mentioned by Mr Thielscher in Philol. 1907 pp. 127 and 129. This too is a representative of M, less faithful than U, less unfaithful than R, but resembling U in its worst feature, its proclivity to omit the unintelligible and the perplexing. Its independence of both is proved by its containing II 184 and other verses omitted by U and II 166 and others omitted by R, while it omits IV 494 and others which U and R contain.*

p. x ll. 34 sq. Delete ‘ or of the other family ’.

* Some account of H was given by Mr Garrod in the Class. Quart. 1909 pp. 57–9, and as half of his statements were wrong I correct them as follows. It consists of 146 leaves. Leaves 1–48 are occupied by Hygin. poet. astr., which breaks off at IV 9 (montium magnitudine), 49–69^r by Q. Serenus, 69^u and

p. xi note. These reports I can now correct from photographs as follows. 5 imitantis R. 11 propius UR. 44 secat corr. ex serat R. 53 signat R. p. xii ll. 16–9. See p. xvii of this volume.

pp. xii sq. Bonincontrius' reading at II 952, as I have said in my note there, is not morti but Marti.

p. xiii ll. 4–8. Among editions having a character of their own should be mentioned a quarto 'sine loco et anno', 5692 in R. Proctor's index of early printed books at the British Museum, assigned to B. de Vitalibus at Venice and to a date about 1500.

p. xiii l. 39. For timidi read tumidi.

p. xv ll. 12 sq. Read 'Plinianae exercitationes'.

p. xv l. 19. The date of Sherburne's translation is 1675.

p. xv l. 23. Creech's first edition appeared in 1697.

p. xv ll. 28–32. See p. xviii of this volume.

p. xvii l. 32. V, as I have already said, begins as early as II 668 or 665.

p. xviii l. 24. Scaliger also in his first edition gave mensibus at III 547.

p. xix ll. 12 sqq. A few apt parallels, the only good thing in Stoeber's edition, probably come from the 'uberrimam locorum parallelorum copiam' in the remains of J. Vierschrot which he mentions on p. 9 of his preface.

p. xix note. I now think that this statement of Jacob's on p. xiv of his edition is simply false; for in progr. Lubec. 1835 p. 17 n. he said that the copy of Scaliger's 2nd ed. containing the collation of V made for Bentley was not the same as the copy containing Withof's conjectures.

p. xxii ll. 27 sqq. I did not praise Bechert's accuracy, because accuracy is a duty and not a virtue; but if I could have foreseen the shameful carelessness of Breiter and van Wageningen I should 70 are blank, 71–145 contain Manilius, 146 is blank. Astro | nomicon in the title of book I is divided so. The blunder Milnili is not found in U and R. At I 350 the reading of H is andromeda; the reading orta at IV 17 is not absent from GLM. IV 666 and 667 are not transposed. V 363 sq. (=362 sq.) are placed after 374 (=373) not only by H but by all mss. H does not omit 'I 809–810 (Breiter)'. Its omissions of I 813 natalibus... 814 rapti and of III 370 are not peculiar to itself but shared with UR and derived from M. extrudere in I 423 (not 431) and et dulcia in II 22 are not conjectures of H but of M².

have said with emphasis, as I do now, that he was very accurate indeed.

p. xxii l. 31. Bechert's selection from the readings of L was by no means 'adequate'.

p. xxiii ll. 18 sq. It is probable that M, that is to say β , had correctly signat, as R has, at i 53; and at 148 its original reading was habilis.

p. xxiii ll. 31 sq. Delete '136 suspensa' etc.

p. xxiii ll. 33 sq. Delete '505 aequorei' etc.

p. xxiv l. 15. In iii 32 casus is omitted not only by M but by L and therefore probably was not in a.

p. xxv ll. 1-6. From these examples of L's superiority to G and M must be subtracted i 545, where G like L has quacumque, iv 400, where L like G has consumant and the true reading is M's consument, and perhaps 882; but the following may be added. i 141 nec L, ne GM, 841 ue . . . ue L, ue . . . ne M, que . . . que G, II 8 profusos L, -us M, -as G, 449 per] fer L, fert G, fers M, 600 populo L, -os GM, 684 partis L, -es GL², -ibus M, 713 constant L, -et GM, 849 imumque L, imum quam G, minumque M, III 459 dimidiam L, -ia GL²M, 567 set L, sed GL², et M, 593 si L, ni GM, 617 trahent L, -et G, -ant M, 680 octaua L, -at G, -am M, IV 322 quicquam L, quis- GL²M, 405 pereant L, -at GM, 453 tu L, tri M, tum G, 812 alia in L, aliam M, in G, 894 in L, om. It is probable that iv 894 and a few others are conjectures.

p. xxv ll. 10-2. M like V has destituente iustum at ii 735 and cogat at iv 919.

p. xxv ll. 38 sq. G's reading at ii 290 is, and L's apparently was, the same as M's.

p. xxv l. 41. At iii 136 M has not quamque but queue.

p. xxvi l. 4. For 327 read 326. At v 363 M has not limine but lumine, and therefore is not better than GL.

p. xxvi l. 13. For confluxit read conflixit. I must now add, what Thomas and Bechert did not record, that G omits que in 910 and M does not.

p. xxvi l. 20. possidet is merely a false report of Ellis's.

p. xxvi l. 23. de toto is from M² rather than M, which seems to have had deltoto. To these examples of interpolation in M may be added ii 39 ritus pastorum] ritus pecorum L Ven., pecorum ritus GM, IV 347 at qui] atque L, atque in M.

- p. xxvii l. 21. At iv 609 M has not comitatus but comutatus.
- p. xxvii l. 35. The reading of L at v 57 seems to have been d̄s malateris.
- p. xxviii l. 2. For 596 read 595.
- p. xxviii l. 16. The natum of L at ii 46 may originally have been natram.
- p. xxviii l. 21. The reading of L at iv 369 is querendo mali quod.
- p. xxviii l. 25. The reading of L at v 389 is arcetenens.
- p. xxviii l. 26. The reading of M at v 425 is dicucet.
- p. xxix ll. 3–14. In my edition of book II I have combined the quod of M with the sit of GLM (and V) and the constent of L (and Voss. 1).
- p. xxix l. 15–p. xxx l. 24. How rightly I rejected the possidet which Ellis reported from M can now be seen, for its reading in fact is condidit.
- p. xxx l. 20. For ‘orbem’ read ‘urbem’.
- p. xxxviii l. 8. suis usu per is merely another of Ellis’s false reports: M has usu per for super but does not omit opibus.
- p. xxxviii ll. 38–40. Valerius Flaccus has ‘surge age et in duris haut umquam defice’ in iv 35, but the negative coalesces with the adverb.
- p. xliv l. 36. For ‘qui sane’ read ‘quae sane’.
- p. xlix l. 22. See Mart. II 46 10 renuis βγ, metuis α.
- p. I l. 28. Compare Stat. Ach. II 392 ‘iam tunc arma manu, iam tunc ceruice pharetræ’.
- p. li l. 6–16. Statius imitates Luc. IX 169 sq. ‘exemplaque carens et nullo cognitus aevo | luctus erat, mortem populos deflere potentis’.
- p. lii l. 9. In Ouid. met. III 417 the best MSS have unda. For umbra add Stat. Theb. IX 229 and Claud. Eutr. II 256.
- pp. liii–lix. ‘Er hat S. liv–lix eine zwecklose Sammlung von allerhand Fehlern mittelalterlicher Schreiber in den verschiedensten lateinischen Prosakern und Dichtertexten ausgekramt, aus der sich im Grunde die gewiss ungemein überraschende Tatsache ergibt, dass die mittelalterlichen Schreiber, wenn sie sich verlasen, etwas Ähnliches wie die Vorlage, und doch wieder in einem oder zwei oder drei oder noch mehr Buchstaben Verschiedenes zum Vorschein brachten, z. I have chosen this sentence for preservation as a specimen of the arts which it was thought permissible and advisable to employ against me when I made my unwelcome appearance. ‘Le mensonge’ said Voltaire ‘ n'est un vice que quand il fait du mal ; c'est une très-grande vertu quand il fait du bien ’ ; and my detractors were of his opinion. I enjoy the unfair advantage of being able to say disagreeable things about them without any departure from the truth.

Many examples of this peculiar and little noticed sort of corruption, the transposition of letters, were collected in 1842 by Unger, electa critica pp. 3–5, and a few in 1881 by Vahlen, opusc. i pp. 141 sq. I myself in these 27 years have noted more than 130 in my margins here out of a much greater number, but I will now cite only some of the most remarkable : Claud. 31 124 pudico, cupido, Iuu. vi 337 psaltria, splatria, Luc. i 532 lampas, palmas, Calp. buc. ii 82 castaneas, canasteas, Ouid. hal. 30 iter inuenit, interuienit, anth. p. lxix ll. 4–23. As I now have photographs of the MSS I can report precisely their spelling of the poet’s name. M has M. Manili after book i, M. Manlii (or Manlli) Boeiii (or Boeiu) after ii (Loewe’s collation in Goett. cod. ms. philol. 139 reproduces the ductus litterarum with great care), M. Milnili after iii. At the beginning of the poem it had no title. It has lost there only a single leaf, the first of its first senio (Thielscher Philol. 1907 p. 88), and on that leaf there was no room for a title, since it was filled by the 80 verses which it contained : the next leaf, which contains the title de origine mundi, contains for that reason only 79 verses. The different titles prefixed to M's three apographs have therefore no authority behind them, but they are these : M. Manilius astronomicon liber primus incipit H, M. Manilius astronomicon liber primus foeliciter incipit U, Marci Manilius Boeui astronomici liber primus incipit R.

The gentile name emerging from Manilius Manilius Milnilius is certainly Manilius. The much more famous name of Manlius would not thus have been corrupted, whereas the name of Manilius is actually altered into Manlius in this same codex M at Stat. silu. i praef. l. 30 ed. Klotz.

The third appellation, in the script which M uses for its titles, may, as I have said, be either Boeiii or Boeiū; but in this particular title the u of tertius is very differently formed. It can hardly be Boeui, as R interprets it (U and H, being puzzled, omit it altogether). It certainly is not Boeni, as V and Ellis represent; for the letter n occurs four times in this title and is always capital in shape. And, no less certainly, it is not Boetii, as van Wageningen asserts in Mnem. 1914 p. 111 and as Mr Thielscher repeats in Philol. LXXXII p. 177; for the letter t occurs here six times and always has an unmistakable cross-stroke. When van Wageningen affirms that M gives eclipticis with the ti similarly written in the title at iv 817, that too is false: it gives eglipiicis (Loewe wrongly reported eb-), unless the two strokes after p are rather u, as they seemed to Ellis. The corrupt eglipiicis is of course ultimately derived from eclipticis, and the corrupt Boeiii may no doubt be similarly derived from Boetii. This cognomen, Boethius, does not make its appearance before the 5th century; but Boethus is at least as old as the 2nd, and may possibly have belonged to our author, as Vollmer Berl. Phil. Woch. 1904 p. 107 n. suggested. On the other hand the word may be a mere interpolation. It occurs only in one of the three places where the poet is given a name, and it occurs in that one place where his name appears as Manlius; so that it may have been added by a scribe who remembered that this was one of the names of the celebrated Boethius. But Mr Thielscher Philol. LXXXII pp. 177 sq. prefers to suppose that the poet's true name had utterly disappeared from the mss of his poem, and that in the middle ages there was affixed to it by pure conjecture the name of that then famous man. Manlius, as I have already said, would not have been corrupted to Manilius and Milnilius, least of all if Boethius followed it; and I must now add, what is sufficiently obvious and ought to have kept Mr Thielscher silent, that his supposition does not account for the praenomen Marcus, present in all three places.

The initial title of G, which occupied two lines, is erased, and a late hand has written Manlius poeta in its stead. The title of L is also in two lines, Arati philosophi astronomicon | liber primus incipit; for prelibatio, which Bechert and Breiter add, is no part of the title but is written in a different character opposite verse 1. This title, which has been copied into the cod. Cusanus saec. XII, is in an ancient hand, which according to Bechert de M. Man. em. rat. p. 10 is that of the original scribe; but it is written (or at least the first line is) over an erasure in which traces of the erased letters (red according to Mr Thielscher Philol. 1907 p. 133) can still be discerned. Underneath astronomicon Bechert detected the same word, and some of its letters are visible even in photographs: the assertion of Breiter vol. I p. iv that they are letters of verse 21 showing through the page in reverse order is a falsehood excused only by the weakness of his eyesight. Mr Thielscher reported that Mr Ziegler and he and Skutsch had further deciphered BOENI, and conjectured that the line originally ran <Marci Manilius> Boeni <astro>nomicon. Now, as he wishes to read Boetii in M, he is obliged to discover BOETII also here, and says in Philol. LXXXII p. 178 that the traces are too faint to be definitely interpreted either way. I have no doubt that they are; and I nurse an uneasy suspicion that they are faint enough to be interpreted with similar indefiniteness as SOPHI, and that the title erased may have been identical with the title superimposed not only in astronomicon but in Arati philosophi. There are places in this MSS (for instance II 870, IV 120, 298, 385, 582) where the scribe, apparently dissatisfied with his calligraphy, has scratched out letters and then written the same letters again; and here his object may have been to stretch the line further to the right, as he has done, and so to make the title more symmetrical.

But Mr Thielscher Philol. LXXXII pp. 179 sq. has invented a name of his own for the poet: ‘das Cognomen war vielleicht Fronto, der Geschlechtsname so etwas wie Navigius’. This conjecture he supports as follows. ‘Firmicus Maternus hat ihn gründlich gekannt und gründlich ausgeschrieben, und man hat Firmicus gescholten, dass er wohl andere Quellen nennt, aber Manilius, seine Hauptquelle, nicht.’ The truth is that Firmicus shows no knowledge of book I or II or III or IV of Manilius, and that his borrowings from Man. V are contained within a few chapters of his last book, which constitute less than $\frac{1}{30}$ of his whole work. ‘Man lese Firmicus, Math. II 1–4 (Kroll-Skutsch Bd. I S. 40 f.), und man frage sich, wer wohl Fronto sein könnte und was es mit dem vielleicht verderbten Navigius auf sich hat.' Anyone who really does read the two pages of Firmicus from which Mr Thielscher has snatched these two names will find that Fronto's treatise was meant for adepts, not for beginners, and was therefore as unlike to this poem as possible, and further that Fronto and Nauigius were not one person but two, holding opposite opinions about antiscia, the opinions respectively of Hipparchus and of Ptolemy. Posterity, if there is to be a posterity for these studies, will think that I ought to have ignored Mr Thielscher's wind-eggs ; and it is the fault of our contemporaries that I cannot.

pp. lxix-lxxii. The merciless prolixity of which I spoke in 1903 was not checked by the example which I set of brevity and condensation but chattered implacably and unprofitably on. There was one exception ; and the modifications which I made in 1920 (at IV 547 and 776) of what I had formerly written were due to four pages (156-9) of a paper by Mr J. G. Smyly in Hermathena no. XXXVIII (1912), on which I commented in the Classical Quarterly vol. VII (1913) pp. 109-14.

Mr Smyly's contribution to the subject was to settle the exact relation between Augustus and Capricorn to which Manilius alludes in II 508 sq. 'quid enim mirabitur ille | maius, in Augusti felix *

* The sense of felix is of course that Capricorn's influence, as the event proved, was propitious ; the same sense as in Verg. buc. v 65, Prop. IV 1 83, Firm. II 22 4 prospera felixque radiatio, and the most appropriate of all possible senses. But Mr W. Gundel Philol. LXXXI p. 315 interposes. 'Nein, es ist der rein astrologische Fachausdruck hier gemeint. Bei Besprechung der Octotropos'—it is not an Octotropos but a Dodecatropos—'sagt Manilius II 888 von dem Platze am Himmel, der das Glück eines Menschen entscheidet : cui titulus felix'. False : that the undecimus locus or ἐπαναφορὰ μεσουρανήματος 'das Glück eines Menschen entscheidet' is private doctrine of Mr Gundel's, not to be found in Manilius ; Paulus Alexandrinus says that it is ἀγαθῶν ἐλπίδων σημαντικός and Valens that it is φίλων, ἐλπίδων, δωρέας, τέκνων, σωμάτων ἀπελευθέρων τόπος. 'Daraus ergibt sich der Sinn : als κλῆρος τύχης hat Capricornus in die Geburt des Augustus hineingestrahlt'. Daraus ! The ἐπαναφορὰ μεσουρανήματος (Man. II 881-90) has nothing whatever to do with the κλῆρος τύχης (Man. III 96-101). But leave his reasoning and come to his conclusion. That Capricornus felix should mean 'Capricorn in the locus fortunae' is impossible. No sign was rendered felix by occupying the locus fortunae, for the locus fortunae itself was no more felix than infelix. In Firm. IV 17 5 we read 'ex hoc loco . . . felicitatis atque infelicitatis cursus ostendi datur' ; Manilius himself in III 91 says of the twelve athla (of which it is one) felix aut triste uenit per singula fatum. But further, the locus fortunae in Manilius is no more associated with felicity and infelicity than any of the other athla : its special province is thus defined, III 97-100, proxima continet in se | fundamenta domus domique haerentia cuncta : | qui modus in seruis, qui sit concessus in aruis | quamque datum magnas operum componere moles ; he understands fortuna as res familiaris or τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, not as τύχη, much less cum fulserit ortum ?' Capricorn was the sign in which the Moon was situate at Augustus' birth. He was born in the year 63 b.c. in the month of September, and, as I have argued at iv 547, on that day of the month which the Romans who saw it rise and set called ix kal. Oct. and which was by numeration the 22nd, though Cassius Dio lvi 30 5, accustomed to the Julian September of 30 days, supposed it to have been the 23rd. But the calendar at that time appears to have been one day ahead of the sun's course, and the birthday therefore was the day which Caesar and we should have reckoned as the 21st of the month, five days before the equinox on the 26th. On that day (and also on the next, which Mr Smyly himself regards as the true date) the Moon was in Capricorn. That Capricorn therefore might or must be deemed the natal star of Augustus is indicated by the words of Cicero which I quoted at ii 726, de diu. ii 91 'cum . . . ortus nascentium Luna moderetur, eaque animaduertant et notent sidera natalicia Chaldae, quae cumque Lunae iuncta uideantur', but more clearly by the parallels as εὐτυχία. And, finally, the κλῆρος τύχησ in the geniture of Augustus was occupied not by Capricorn but by Cancer. Manilius' method of finding it, which is that of Paulus Alexandrinus, is given in iii 176–202, and I have explained it there on pp. vii–xi. In order to bring the κλῆρος τύχησ to Capricorn it is necessary to ignore what Manilius has written and to impose on his words from without an interpretation of which they are incapable. Not yet content with his performance, and wishing to display gratuitously his ignorance of astronomy, Mr Gundel adds on p. 318 that the position of the planets in the geniture of Augustus is unknown. It can be calculated exactly.

Fifty mortal pages of vol. LXXXI of the Philologus has this intruder been allowed to fill with matter which he calls 'textkritische und exegetische Bemerkungen zu Manilius'. Because he has read a great deal more astrology than he can digest, he supposes himself fitted to invade the criticism and interpretation of a Latin poet, without first acquiring a knowledge of the tongue, a tincture of literature, or a notion of what thinking means. And mouths are open to swallow all that he may say. Listen to one of them. Mr J. G. W. M. de Vreese published in 1927 a book on 'Petron 39 und die Astrologie' designed to prove that Trimalchio was an adept and Petronius a fool; and on p. 121 he thus proclaims his complete deception: 'Neuerdings hat W. Gundel in Philolog. 1926 p. 313 seqq. die ganze Sache ausführlich erörtert und zur endgültigen Lösung gebracht. Im Zusammenhang mit Man. ii 509 "in Augusti felix cum fulserit ortum" weist Gundel darauf hin, dass nach den astrologischen Lehren gerade demjenigen Sternbild, das im κλῆρος τύχησ stand, der ausschlaggebende Einfluss auf das Schicksal eines Menschen zukam. Mit dem worte "felix" nun deutet Manilius darauf hin, dass der zunehmende Mond, der sich am Geburtstage des Aug. im letzten Dekan des Capricornus befand, dort im κλῆρος τύχησ stand.' It is not my business to run about saving dupes from dupery: I have exhibited one sample of Mr Gundel's quality, and that should be enough; it absolves me from taking any further notice of him.

in Man. iv 773–7, where it is said that Rome was founded and the reigning emperor born under Libra. That the Moon was in Libra at the foundation of Rome we are informed on the authority of L. Tarutius Firmanus by Cicero de diu. ii 98, Solinus 1 18, and Lydus de mens. i 14; and that she was also in Libra at the birth of Tiberius we know from Suet. Tib. 5 combined with the modern tables of astronomical chronology. Further, as I have remarked in the addenda to iv 122–291 on p 156, the effects there attributed to the twelve signs must apparently be effects which they produce not when occupying the horoscope but when occupied by the Moon.

My assignment of book iv to the reign of Tiberius is therefore confirmed. The conjunction of Libra with Tiberius on the Pontic coin should mean what the similar conjunction of Capricorn with Augustus is now found to mean, that the man was born when the Moon was in that sign; and he was. The statement in iv 773–7 that Rome was founded and the reigning emperor born under Libra, since it means that the Moon was in Libra when Rome was founded, should mean that she was in Libra when the reigning emperor was born; and so she was if the reigning emperor was Tiberius. And that Tiberius was in fact the reigning emperor is, as I said, the plain sense of iv 764–6. But the account in iv 547–52 of the effects of the first part of Libra when occupying the horoscope is best referred, as I allowed in 1903 that it might be, to Augustus, since we do not know what sign occupied the horoscope at Tiberius' birth. It fits Augustus perfectly; and the words 'illum . . . caeli post terras iura manebunt' admit, though they do not require, the interpretation that he was dead and deified.*

* I ought perhaps to say a word on certain attempts to make Scorpius the natal star of Tiberius. In the so-called gemma Augustea at Vienna, figured in Gardthausen's Augustus i p. 1231, Rome and Augustus sit side by side with Capricorn above them, Tiberius descends from a triumphal car, and soldiers are rearing a trophy on which hangs a shield, not Roman in shape, with the device of a scorpion. Passow opusc. acad. pp. 321–9 and A. von Domaszewski Abh. z. römischen Religion pp. 14 sq. connect this emblem with Tiberius and remark that at his birth the Sun was in Scorpius. It was, and for three weeks before and a week afterwards; but Scorpius was not therefore his natal star, nor is it credible that this sign should for that reason be associated with Tiberius in a gem which associates with Augustus the sign occupied at his birth not by the Sun but by the Moon. Moreover Tiberius and this scorpion-shield are not in fact associated, but appear in different compartments of the design. A shield of foreign shape on a Roman trophy would most naturally be a spoil from the vanquished, and the scorpion (which appears again, this time on a square shield, in a trophy figured by Zoega Bassirilievi ii tav. 113) is much more likely to be somehow indicative of Illyria or Pannonia. Passow mentions another gem, Nothing in this scandalous preface gave more scandal than my disrespect towards Quellenforschung in general and Posidonius in particular: poor Posidonius, whose epitaph is ‘ For O ! for O ! the hobby-horse is forgot.’ In 1903 the earth was overrun by those who are now derided as ‘ Pamposidonisten ’, and it was presumptuous ignorance to doubt that the tabernacle of contemporary dogma was a mansion for eternity. An investigation of the sources whence Manilius may have derived his physics and cosmology, even if it were soberly conducted and could ascertain them definitely, would be a mere appendix to such an edition as mine; and perhaps he was not always kind enough to consult only books and authors whose names we were destined to know.

one of the Stosch collection ‘ in thesauro regio gemmarum Berolinensi ’, class. iv 2 n. 220, as having Tiberius’ head on one side and a scorpion on the other; but I learn from Mr A. S. F. Gow that according to Furtwaengler the head on this stone, now Berol. 6446, is not Tiberius’ but a Greek’s of the Hellenistic age, and the scorpion is a late addition. Von Domaszewski further contends that the scorpion shown on the standard of the third praetorian cohort in his Fahnen im römischen Heere, p. 31 fig. 5 (Zoega Bassirilievi i tav. 16, C.I.L. xiv 2523), is there too the natal star of Tiberius, and he exerts himself to forge a link between Tiberius and the praetorians. But his attempts to establish relations between the nativities of emperors and the devices on military standards are not very successful. Some of these devices, Pegasus, the boar, and the stork, are not zodiacal signs at all. When Capricorn appears on the standard of the legio II Augusta, then indeed the connexion is evident; but when the IV Flavia has a lion on its standard and he promptly conjectures that ‘ der Löwe in der Stunde von Vespasians Geburt als Horoscop am Osthimmel stand ’, there are two comments to be made. First, the imperial forces were capricious astrologers if they fixed Augustus’ natal star (as they did) by the Moon, Tiberius’ (as he supposes) by the Sun, and Vespasian’s (as he now will have it) by the horoscope. Secondly we learn from Suet. Vesp. 2 1 that Vespasian’s horoscope was not in Leo. He was born A.D. 9 ‘ xv kal. Dec. uesperi ’: the horoscope was therefore in Taurus (or an adjacent sign), the Moon in Aries, and the Sun in Scorpius; and Leo, except as belonging to the square of Taurus, was out of action.

BOOK I: ORTHOGRAPHY OF TEXT

In 1903, lacking minute knowledge of L and somewhat mistrusting Ellis's reports of M, I generally obeyed G in such matters as assimilation and the acc. plur. of the 3rd declension. I should now make the following changes.

BOOK I: APPARATVS CRITICVS

Corrections and additions. The principal corrections needed are in collators' reports of mss. The additions are chiefly from L, of which Bechert had given too little information; from Gronouius' collation of the cod. Venetus, brought to light by Mr Garrod in 1911; from mss of the renascence which anticipate the emendations of editors; and in verses 1–82 from the three apographs of M. But further, finding that in my later volumes I have grown more indulgent and have often mentioned for their own sake, as in one way or another instructive or interesting, variants which are of no moment for recension or emendation, I now admit a good many which were excluded by my former austerity. Those from M may help to teach its adorers how corrupt it is.

10 uincit et codices iv 280 in loco ob orationis iuncturam suspecto, ii 849 int̄er imum et v 384 Veneris et GL, iv 53 possēt alium LM.

11 propius fauet. Quint. inst. x 1 91 quem praesidentes studiis deae propius audirent?, Mart. i 70 15 propior quam Phoebus amet, Luc. x 47 propius timuere sarisas.

12 sensus pro census codices ii 69, M ii 457, census pro sensus codices ii 516.

13 redeo ad antiquorum codicum lectionem hoc sub pace uocat tantum. nam tandem in M a prima manu scriptum fuisse non satis constat ex apographorum URH consensu, qui, ut hoc utar, uersu 98 omnes alterius correctionem et rerum causas exhibent pro rerum causis; ordinem autem uerborum quo diuelluntur inter se cohaerentia sub pace et tantum Manilianum esse comprobant i 677 sq. tantum . . . mente, ii 376 singula . . . tantum, iv 794 feris . . . tantum.

18 qua in Ciceronis uersu ante me Dauiiesius.

20 positis lucent altaria flammis audacius dictum est quam 890 coaceruatis ardebat corpora membris, cum rectius altaria quam flammea poni dicantur, ut Stat. Theb. x 597 pone . . . altaria, Verg. Aen. v 404 positis aris; sed uide Il. Lat. 34 posuisse altaribus ignes, Luc. vi 525 funereas aris inponere flamas, Stat. Theb. x 604 coronatos . . . ignes.

24 Ouid. trist. v 12 34 inque suos uolui cogere uerba pedes; uide etiam Man. ii 767 Pieridum numeris etiam modulata.

25 coniecturam meam, cui statim diffidere coepi cum Vollmerum et Bollium eam probare didicisse, nunc abicio. quem, quod iam L recte ad mundus 23 rettulerat, non proprie relativum est sed orationem continuat, illum autem, ut 122; interius confirmant iv 908 sq. nec sola fronte deorum | contentus manet, et caelum scrutatur in aluo; terris pro hominibus terram habitantibus positum est ut Luc. vii 456, Val. 805–808 post 812 detrudentem Scaligerum ne sequerer retinere me debuit stellarum, hoc est planetarum, in 809 facta mentio, cui male subicitur alia sidera de isdem dictum. horum quattuor de planetis uersuum uerus ac proprius locus est post signorum commemorationem uersu 538 absolutam; atque adeo ita concepti sunt ut ad 532–8 aperte respicere uideantur, cum inter se opposita sint altius his nihil est, haec sunt fastigia mundi et terram caelumque inter uolantia, porro concordi tractu ueniunt . . . quo semel incubuit caelum et aduerso pugnantia . . . mundo. quo casu illic exciderint dici non potest; facilius, cur postea huc delati sint. ceterum planetas inter terram caelumque uolitantes pendere Breiterus et Wageningenus non didicerant, cumque ignorarent, negauerunt.

Cic. anth. Lat. Ries. 642 14 tanta supra circaque uigent tibi lumina mundi (quamquam incerta lectio est) et Seru. Aen. III 517 explorare stellarum uigorem, quo futura indicatur serenitas.

Lat. VI p. 798 56–8 receptam coniecturam ita enarrauit, ‘manet intra fines incipiendi’, cuius significationis nullum exemplum saeculo VI antiquius eiusdem thesauri conditoribus notum erat cum III pp. 1430 sq. publicarent.

883 de fata peragere uide nunc thes. ling. Lat. VI p. 364 29 sq., ubi recte hic uersus omittitur.

885 adde v 124 pacis bella et Luc. II 171 Sullanae . . . cadauera pacis.

890 coaceruatis membris, coaceruata, ut v 127 hos generant Hyades mores surgentibus astris.

895 Wageningeno Mnem. an. 1913 p. 200 semel accedit ut probabilem coniecuturam faceret, hominum sortita sepulchrum, hoc est quale homines sortiuntur. nouum ex hōum uel hōium nasci potuit.

896 sq. imitatur Verg. georg. I 464 sq. ille (sol) etiam caecos instare tumultus | saepe monet fraudemque et operta tumescere bella, ubi quae praecedunt nerba quis dicere falsum audeat mutnatus est II 134 sq.

898 Petr. 117 9 imperamus Eumolpo ut plurimum tussiat, ut sit modo <adstrictoris, modo> solutioris stomachi cibosque omnes palam damnet Buechelerus, cum Casaubonus modo omiserit. laudatoris Messallae uersibus accedit Luc. VI 465–9 nunc omnia complent | imbris, . . . nocibus isdem . . . nebulas nimbosque . . . excussere.

902 tulit, gessit, ut Sil. III 365 et Stat. Theb. III 656.

925 ad sit Roma sub illo Breiterus et Wageningenus perstant audire cum Stoebero inuicta, quasi ullo pacto fieri possit ut Roma sub Caesare inuicto inuicta non sit.

926 adde Stat. silu. IV 2 59 sq. rata numina miseris astris | templaque des habitesque domos, hoc est tecta humana, quod ob Vollmeri errorem dicendum est, Mart. XIII 4 serus ut aetheriae Germanicus imperet aulae | utque diu terris, da pia tura Ioui, Calp. buc. IV 141 sit deus et nolit pensare Palatia caelo. Ouid. ex Pont. I 2 100 sq. ita correxi in Classical Quarterly an. 1916 p. 141, alma nihil maius Caesare terra ferat | utque diu sub eo sic sit sub Caesare (aliquo) semper (terra libri ex uersu superiore), ubi addere debui fast. IV 859 sis magno sub Caesare semper et Mart. XII 6 6 dux tibi sit semper talis, et iste diu.

BOOK II: PREFACE

p. vii uu. 157-196. Add Auson. 332 46 sq. (Peip. p. 26) tu tropicum solidu da cedere, rursus et illud | terga dare, ut duplex tropico uarietur ab astro. In papyr. astrol. Class. Phil. 1927 p. 20, 2 D 7, read [δί]μορφα Τοξότησ Αιγύκερωσ. Jacob's fiction copied by Bouché-Leclercq is again copied by Boll in Woch. f. klass. Phil. 1913 p. 123. Part of the delusion may have arisen from the title in the MSS at II 159, quae signa duplia sint et (quae) biformia. Manilius calls all five bina: biformis he applies to Capricorn III 257, and that is the only place where he uses the word; Sagittarius, who according to Jacob and his dupes is biformis and neither geminus nor duplex, is called geminus in II 552 and IV 784, duplici formatus imagine in II 188, biformis nowhere.

p. ix l. 7. A comma has dropped out between ≈ and ½, and in the next line δέ after ≈.

p. x uu. 265-269. That Manilius distributed the signs among the seasons as I have said, Pisces Aries Taurus to spring and so forth, is consonant with III 253, where he puts the equinox medio uere.

p. xiii uu. 352-357. Some held the contrary opinion, that the quadrate aspect has more force than the trine. C.C.A.G. VI p. 62 10-3 αἱ τετράγωνοι (πλευραὶ) τὴν μεγίστην ἐνέργειαν ἔχουσιν, ἐάν τε ἀγαθῶν ὥστι δηλωτικὰν ἐάν τε φαύλων· ή δὲ τρίγωνος πολλάκις οὐτε ἀγαθὸν ποιεῖ ἐπηρμένον οὕτε κακόν. Papyr. astrol. Class. Philol. 1927 p. 25, frag. 6 17–21, is to be written and punctuated thus: οἱ κακοποιοὶ (ἀστέρεσ) τετράγωνοι καὶ διάμετροι εὐτονώτατοί εἰσιν εἰσ τὸ βλαπτεῖν [τὸ θέμα, τρίγων]οι δὲ ἀβλαβεῖσ εἰσιν. οἱ δὲ ἀγαθοποιοὶ [τρίγων]οι ὡφελιμώτατοι, τετράγωνοι [δὲ καὶ] διάμετροι ἀτονώτεροι.

p. xv uu. 395–432. C.C.A.G. vi p. 62 14 sq. ἐν τοῖσ διαμέτροισ οἱ μὲν κακοποιοί εἰσι χαλεποί, οἱ δὲ ἀγαθοποιοὶ οὐδαμῶσ κακοί.

p. xviii uu. 485–519. For uidentia and audientia add papyr. astrol. Class. Phil. 1927 pp. 17 sq., 2 B 13–44, which I have corrected ib. pp. 260 sq. There is strange stuff under this title in Firm. viii 3. My corrections of Heph. Theb. ii 22 as given in C.C.A.G. vi p. 100 are confirmed by C.C.A.G. viii ii p. 89, where that chapter recurs.

p. xxiv. τὰ δωδεκατημόρια τῶν ἀστέρων and similar terms occur also in C.C.A.G. viii iii pp. 106, 116, viii iv pp. 48, 119, 123, 127, 133, 155 sq., 184 sq., 195, 215, 216, 219.

p. xxv l. 29. For ‘twelve’ κλῆροι, which is Manilius’ number, I should rather have said ‘seven’, which is the number in Paul. Alex. K 2.

p. xxviii uu. 841–855. The seasons of life are distributed through the twelve τόποι, which fill the same space as the four τεταρτημόρια, in Porph. isag. p. 202 and C.C.A.G. viii iv p. 231 24–33, where τούτον in l. 24 should be ταύτησ.

p. xxix uu. 856–967. δωδεκάτροπος occurs also in C.C.A.G. i p. 72 (=Ludw. Maxim. p. 126 fin.), iv p. 43, v i p. 68, viii i pp. 100, 101, 121, 122, 123, 124, iv p. 126 12 (see app. crit.), and δωδεκατροπία in viii iii p. 107 31 sq. In viii i p. 246 21 sq. δωδεκατρόπου is given by both MSS at one place and by the older MS at both places, but at one the younger has δωδεκατόπου, so that Scaliger is not, as I supposed, the first inventor of this form. Mr Cumont corrupts the spelling when he observes it, but it more often escapes his notice.

BOOK II: APPARATVS CRITICVS

As the reports of L and M in books II and III and IV were my own, the corrections to be made in the apparatus criticus are so few and insignificant that they need not be separated from the corrections and augmentations of the commentary. But in this book, not in the two others, I have to add certain lections, not known to me in 1912, of the Venetus and of the later MSS collated by Bentley.

BOOK IV: PREFACE

p. vii circ. fin. Mr V. V. Ramana-Śāstrin points out in the Classical Review 1922 p. 20 that in C.C.A.G. ii pp. 153–7 the planets connected with the decans are not arranged in the usual order but otherwise determined: the first decan of each sign belongs to the planet whose house that sign is, the second and third to the planets whose houses are the τρίγωνα of that sign; so that while the first decan of Aries belongs, as in the other scheme, to Mars, and the second to the Sun (whose house is Leo), the third belongs not to Venus but to Jupiter (one of whose houses is Sagittarius), the first decan of Taurus to Venus, and so forth. He adds that this is also the system of Varāhamihira, who wrote about the middle of the 6th century after Christ, and of Satya, who perhaps wrote in the 4th century.

p. x uu. 408–501. Van Wageningen observes at 481 sq. ‘ si te fata sinant, quartam ne selige partem | Centauri ; fuge et octauam ’ that ne selige and fuge, which cannot be advice to the unborn on the choice of a nativity, must apparently have reference to the καταρχαί of which I spoke at III 154, the lucky or unlucky moments for initiating a course of action, which provided Maximus with the subject and the title of his poem. The same remark will apply to 441 sq. ‘ nec parua est gratia nostri | oris, si tantum poterit signare cauenda ’. But on the other hand we find 428 sq. ‘ quodque per has geritur partes sine fruge creatur | aut cadit aut multis sentit bona mixta querellis ’, where geritur indeed and cadit are ambiguous, but creatur and sentit bona can only refer to the birth of living creatures. Nativities moreover are the poet’s theme both in what precedes this account of the partes damnandae and in what follows it : in 122–293 (the twelve signs), in 294–386 (the decans, see 370–7 creatür, nascitur, fetus, partus), and in 502–84 (certain degrees of the signs at the moment of their rising, see 507 generabit etc.) ; and the partes damnandae are so linked to the decans by verses 409–15 and to the rising degrees by verses 502–4 that they must necessarily themselves also pertain to nativities. It appears therefore that Manilius has let his attention wander. Absorbed in his arithmetic, which he loved much better than astrology, he forgets at 481 sq. what he ought to be talking about, and slips into phrases like Verg. georg. i 277 quintam fuge, which are appropriate only to καταρχαί. This excuse cannot be pleaded for the cauenda of 442 ; but there the inconsistency is less salient, and cauenda is no more than an incautious variation of damnanda.

It was characteristic of van Wageningen that in making the just remark which I have cited from his p. 232 he should forget what he had said of these partes damnandae on p. 229, where he tried to connect them with the μοῖραι σινωτικαὶ or σινωτικαὶ ὁφθαλμῶν of certain late Greek astrologers, such as one of A.D. 379 from whom we have a chapter περὶ σινωποιῶν μοῖρῶν ἡτοι τόπων τῶν σινουμένων τὰς ὅψεις in C.C.A.G. v i pp. 208 sq. These are places in the zodiac said to contain nebulous clusters, νεφελοειδεῖς συστροφάσ ; and men in whose genitures any one of these degrees plays an important part, οἱ οὕτω γεννώμενοι, suffer injury, mostly to the eyes, when the Moon or Sun under certain conditions is found in that degree. What professes to be a full list of the σινωτικαὶ μοῖραι is given by Antiochus in C.C.A.G. vii pp. 111 sq. : apart from repetitions they are 34 in number, and only 8 or at most 9 of them are among Manilius’ partes damnandae. In viii iv p. 187 Rhetorius enumerates 27, most of which are included in the longer catalogue ; and ibid.

pp. 190 sq. there is a slightly diverging list of μοῖραι σινωτικαὶ ὄφθαλμῶν.

ORTHOGRAPHIA CODICVM GLM

In the apparatus criticus I have never without special cause made mention of purely orthographical variants, and have sometimes for the sake of brevity ignored orthographical trifles, as in saying ‘componet GL², conponit LM’ at v 471, where L has conponit; and in the text I have often tacitly corrected the medieval spelling of all MSS and have even excluded for the sake of perspicuity forms so correct and well supported as the numeral quod and the conjunction ad. This appendix is meant to record the legitimate variations of the MSS and such of their errors as are not merely barbarous. It disregards for the most part the usual or regular misspellings of the middle ages: their treatment of ae and e and oe, i and y, ph and f; their addition (very frequent in ora both singular and plural) or subtraction of the aspirate; and such things as menbrum and utrunque and Ligurgus.
